THIS AND THAT

By THE EDITOR

EDITOR'S NOTE: For publication in the first issue of OLD OREGON, last March, Chancellor Kerr was invited to extend a greeting to the alumni of the University through the columns of this magazine. Press of heavy administrative duties, with matters affecting all five of Oregon's institutions of higher learning demanding much of his time, have made it impossible up to now to secure such a message from Oregon's first chancellor of higher education. Nevertheless, we are pleased, in this last issue of the school year, to print the long awaited message, and are happy to turn the space ordinarily reserved for our own remarks over to Chancellor Kerr.

I AM glad to accept an invitation to extend a greeting to the alumni of the University through the columns of OLD OREGON. It has been very gratifying to note the regular appearance again of the monthly issues, each of which I have thoroughly enjoyed reading.

Through this magazine the alumni, keeping step with the progress of the wide interests in which they serve, have an adequate means of keeping informed on the progress of the University. Of paramount importance to any university or college, especially a state-supported institution, is an informed and sympathetic body of alumni. They are the contact officers between the institution and its constituency. To the leadership of such alumni, actuated by a conviction of the reality of the service their Alma Mater has rendered to them and to the state, the public always maintains an attitude of sympathetic attention.

In this connection I should like to acknowledge my personal appreciation of the constructive cooperation of University of Oregon alumni, especially in the recent legislative session. It was a very effective service on behalf of higher education.

The unified administration of the several state institutions of higher education in Oregon, established through the creation of the State Board of Higher Education, aims to coordinate and articulate the various higher educational functions into a cooperative system. The several institutions—each in its particular sphere, but each complementary to the others—are to perform their respective functions as elements in an integrated whole. But the individuality of each institution—its distinctive purpose in the service of the state, its traditions, its aspirations and ideals—is not to be in any way impaired; on the contrary, in all constructive respects it is to be intensified and developed.

As the intimate and authoritative organ of the Alumni Association, OLD OREGON can render a priceless service by a sincere and constructive devotion to the best interests of the University and the state.

Scenes at Commencement Time

THERE was much of interest and much to do during the fifty-sixth annual commencement exercises of the University of Oregon this June when 674 students were granted degrees of varying ranks. Upper left: The crowd that gathered in front of the new men's dormitory for the exercises which officially designated the building as John Straub Memorial building in honor of Oregon's beloved "Grand Old Man." Upper right: Scene following the opening exercises of the Museum of Fine Arts when thousands viewed the Murray Warner collection in its new quarters. Middle left: The speakers and academic officials at the commencement exercises. From left to right: Wayne L. Morse, dean of the school of law; Dr. Joseph Schafer, commencement speaker; Rev. Ernest M. Whitesmith; Chancellor W. J. Kerr; Burt Brown Barker, vice-president of the University; Dr. George Rebec, dean of the graduate school; Dr. Harold B. Meyers, associate dean of the medical school; and James H. Gilbert, dean of the school of social science. Middle right: The bronze bust of Dean John Straub, gift of the class of 1933, unveiled in the foyer of the building which was dedicated in his memory. Lower left: The crowd that packed McArthur court for the commencement exercises. Lower right: Dr. Schafer, who was given an honorary doctor of laws degree, and Winifred Esther Bradway, who was the only candidate out of four present for the granting of the degree of Ph.D.

Alumni Face Facts and Future

WITH apparent realization that the time had come for a serious recapitulation of their own affairs, both as an organization and as an auxiliary University department which seeks to promote true educational ideals and progress in the state, the University of Oregon Alumni association, meeting in semi-annual convention on the campus June 10, showed distinct signs of a forthcoming "new deal" for association affairs.

Foremost among the matters brought before the meeting was the proposal to establish a "Welfare committee" to act as an intermediary body between University officials, educational partisans and any other groups or individuals interested in higher education in the state and the Alumni association. The resolution, providing for such a committee was presented by Judge Howard Zimmerman of Astoria, and unanimously passed by the alumni. President Homer D. Angell has since made the appointments to this group. He automatically is made a member and chairman of the committee. His appointees are: John Veatch of Portland, George Hug of Salem, Georgia Benson Patterson of Hillsboro, and Lynn S. McCready of Eugene. The alumni secretary is to serve as an ex-officio member and secretary.

The clause from the resolution setting forth the duties of the committee

Alumni meeting held during Commencement indicative of new spirit that seems to be growing among graduates. Welfare committee named to coordinate University and higher education functions with interests of the Alumni.

says: "that it (the committee) shall be empowered to establish policies and promote or initiate activities that it shall deem of benefit to the association and the University; that it shall invite suggestions from University administrative officials and any individual or organization which seeks the cooperation or an expression of confidence by the Alumni association in activities affecting the University; and that this committee shall at all times endeavor to serve the highest standards for higher education in the state of Oregon and the best interests of the University of Oregon."

In the way of further "putting their own house in order," the association passed a resolution establishing a constitutional revision committee. The present constitution has been in use since the inception of the association, and although many changes have been made in it since that time, of recent years it has been found unwieldy and cumbersome. Dean James H. Gilbert, Carlton Spencer, and the alumni secretary were named on this committee.

Two other resolutions were passed at the alumni meeting. One was in appreciation of the work done by citizens of the state of Oregon in behalf of the defeat of the Zorn - Macpherson bill. The other commended Mrs. Gertrude Bass Warner for her generosity and energy in bringing to completion the opening of the Murray Warner Collection of Oriental Art in the new Museum of Art building.

The alumni voted an honorary life membership to both Miss Jeannette Calkins and Alexander G. Brown, former secretaries of the group.

Dr. William Jasper Kerr, chancellor of higher education, gave a short talk of welcome to the alumni, expressing appreciation for their interest in the institution.

Back after a score of years the class of 1913 was very much in evidence on the campus this commencement. Those present, shown in the picture are: front row—Mrs. Helen Holbrook Conklin, Eugene; Mrs. Ruby Edwards Ramsey, Keokuk, Iowa; Mrs. Nellie Hemenway Price, Mrs. Cecil Miller Ellinwood, Miss Sybil Brown, Mrs. Esther Maegly Justice, all of Portland; back row—H. B. Ruth, Carlton Spencer, Eugene; H. J. Warner, Pendleton; Jack Luckey, Edward F. Bailey, Eugene; and Judge Howard K. Zimmerman, Astoria. Two others, Ralph Cake of Portland and Karl W. Onthank, Eugene, were not present for the picture.

That alumni are taking more than a desultory interest in the affairs of higher education was evident at the University luncheon, when speakers from the reunion classes, one after another, made some mention of the current difficulties of higher education in Oregon and took cognizance of the increasing part the alumni of the institutions must play in bringing about readjustments and in reestablishing the public's faith in Oregon's schools of higher learning.

More than 400 attended the commencement luncheon given at the Straub dormitory immediately following the dedication of the building. Mr. Angell presided as toastmaster.

Mrs. Jennie Spencer Luckey, Eugene, the 50-year graduate, was honored guest at the luncheon. Seated with her were Mrs. C. M. Collier, Eugene, class of '80, Miss Anne Whiteaker, Eugene, class of '81, and Miss Mary E. McCornack, Eugene, class of '82.

Mrs. Luckey addressed the group, saying it was hard to realize it was 50 years ago she had graduated, that there was still a connection between this age and that of the class of 50 years ago when Indians were still in the valley and covered wagons still crossing the plains.

"Our University was just as good in those days as it is now. Every bit," she said, with a smile. Preceding her talk, the other three graduates of more than 50 years were introduced. Mrs. Luckey was presented with a large bouquet of roses from the alumni group.

Cecil J. Espey of the class of '33 spoke on "Commencement—Our Beginning as Alumni." John W. Anderson, Eugene, spoke from the class of 1923. Robert W. Prescott, Eugene, gave the talk for the class of '08.

"The University and the Graduate" was the topic for a talk by Dr. Kerr. "Meeting the Problems of Higher Education" was the subject for a short talk by Mr. Starr from the board.

One of the most beautiful traditions of commencement, the annual flower and fern procession, was staged by women graduates and the senior women on the grounds surrounding the pioneer mother statue Saturday evening. Each senior and alumna brought flowers and laid them, following the procession, at the foot of the statue, forming the traditional flowery "O."

Immediately following the procession, the University orchestra, directed by Rex Underwood, and the Polyphonic choir, directed by Roy G. Bryson, presented the annual twilight concert.

Frederic Dunn's Eulogy of Dean Straub

EDITOR'S NOTE: Frederic Dunn, a life-long friend and for many years a fellow faculty member of Dean Straub's, was selected to deliver the eulogy at the dedication of the New Men's dormitory as "John Straub Memorial Building" and the unveiling of the bronze bust of Dean Straub in the building foyer. His eulogy, titled "Magister, Te Salutamus," is printed here in full.

ONCE upon a time there was a little boy, doubtless with unwashed face and hair uncombed—though that he can not now recall—upon whose head there rested for a few brief moments a beneficent hand, accompanied by a word of cheer and a twinkling smile. Half a century has since elapsed, and that boy, now with his face to the west, looks back to that chance greeting as a crisis in his life, marking the choice of his career and profession. The hand was the hand of the man to whose honor this structure is being dedicated today.

The parable just detailed is no fiction, but a true criterion of what hundreds of others of his boys and girls could tell of our late dean emeritus, Dr. John Straub. Generations of freshmen have come and gone, carrying with them the same memories of a hand grasp that warmed the heart, a smile that chased away trouble, a word that was decisive for good and the soul's welfare.

It is a fearful thing to be the preceptor of youth. No true teacher but will trouble to realize his responsibility, how a false attitude may detour a student for all life's span, a careless word, an error in judgment may cost a pupil irreparable woe.

Therefore, how clean and white the page on which is written John Straub's record as a teacher, for no one ever questioned his sincerity of purpose. What a striking instance of the conscientious and the consistent in the classrooms over which John Straub presided for half-a-century! His theory—which some dared gainsay then and none can now refute—was, that the student came to the University to learn, and, if not, then there were enough other institutions whither to wend one's way. The inevitable resulted—only those with the iron of soul could sit at the feet of this Gamaliel.

A passage from the Scriptures is aptly descriptive of Oregon's original faculty of whom Dean Straub was a sixth—"There were giants in those days," benevolent, but terribly just Olympians. And students went forth from their tutelage equipped not merely with a diploma but the ability to read and propound the same. It was written in Latin.

I well remember how, on returning to the campus to assume a teaching position after six years' absence, I began to sense a qualm of disappointment, to find a strange bacillus at work among the student body. For the first time I heard the expression "I am not prepared," and, if I did not hear it, that status was often quite in evidence. A new generation had arisen that knew not Joseph—whose name was John Straub. Only a moron, even granted that he had not accomplished the assignment, would have dared stammer such a declaration before the dais of John Straub's room.

As if in palliating apology, I have heard Dr. Straub referred to as a

ON AND ABOUT THE CAMPUS

THE University of Oregon, Oregon State college, and state normal schools at Ashland, Monmouth and La Grande will all open for the coming school year on September 18, according to a bulletin on entrance information just issued by the Division of Information of the State System of Higher Education. All freshmen will report to the University and state college for "freshman week" at this time. Old students will register at the University September 20.

Memorial Professorship Voted

As a memorial to Prince L. Campbell, president of the University of Oregon from 1902 until his death in 1925, a professorship of philosophy, to be known as the "Prince L. Campbell Professorship in Philosophy," was voted at a State Board of Higher Education meeting recently. Dr. George Rebec, present head of the philosophy department, was named to the chair.

Music Work Coordinated

More complete coordination between the musical activities of the University and State college campuses has been accomplished by action of the State Board of Higher Education in naming Paul Petrie of Oregon State to be in charge of vocal work on both campuses, while Rex Underwood of the University department will have charge of instrumental and orchestral instruction.

Secretary's Salary Advanced

Earl M. Pallett, executive secretary of the University, has been advanced from a base salary of $4,500 a year to a base salary of $5,000 a year by action of the State Board of Higher Education. Cuts reduce this salary to $3,850. Like action was applied at Oregon State college. The change was made on the recommendation of Chancellor Kerr to recognize the responsibilities of the executive secretary in the absence of a campus president, but it does not mean that Pallett is necessarily slated for the campus presidency.

Onthank Invited to Meet

An invitation to take part in the conference on personnel in higher education, sponsored by the Edward W. Hazen foundation, has been received by Karl W. Onthank, dean of personnel administration of the University of Oregon. The session, to be held August 12 to 20 in Estes Park, Colorado, will be limited to 60 members. These will be selected from leading institutions in the United States where personnel programs have attained recognition.

Oregon Grads in the Pear Center

By EVA NEALON HAMILTON, '27

GOING around my beat for the Medford Mail Tribune most any old day in this, the pear center of Oregon, is like traveling through a cross section of homecoming. For it always constitutes a reunion with many old grads. They're all about the town. Here, there and everywhere. If I don't put them in the news, I put them in the society.

Their faces appear in all prominent groups, except among the much publicized '22, indicted for the Jackson county ballot theft of last February. I see no sons of old Oregon there. But many in the court room. On the attorneys bench each day several appear. For the University has contributed to the handling of Medford's legal problems: Don Newbury, '21, firm of Newbury and Newbury (his wife was formerly Marjorie Delzell, ex-'22); Harry Skyman, '23, bankruptcy referee; Edward C. Kelly, '27, firm of Kelly and Kelly, Democratic representative to the Oregon legislature and in line to receive a political plum soon; City Attorney Frank Farrell, ex-'19; Kramer Deuel, '29; T. W. Miles, '00; and A. E. (Evan) Reames, ex-'92, one of Oregon's best known barristers, a mighty good Democrat and one whom all other Democrats expect to ascend the federal bench in San Francisco. Portlanders say the appointment is in the bag.

EACH day before I start this round of the town I scan the latest gossip with none other than Margaret Hensley, '27, who also looks to the newspaper for livelihood. She sells advertisements for the Mail Tribune.

Another from journalistic ranks back in Medford is Paul Luy, ex-'28, covering the trials for International News service and the Sacramento Bee.

Turning into the medical ranks for the latest dope on accidents of the week-end, numerous old grads are encountered: Dr. Wm. W. P. Holt, '05; Dr. A. F. W. Kresse, '20; Dr. F. G. Thayer, '03; Dr. E. W. Durno, '23, the old basketball champion, now doing important things in surgery, raising a family and planning to go to the world's fair.

Telephone company and schools here are also headed by "Oregon" brains. R. B. Hammond, ex-'08, is manager of the Home Telephone and Telegraph company. (His son, Robert, Jr., became an alumnus in June). E. H. Hedrick, '16, is superintendent of schools. He has been for six years and has brought them to a standard, which makes good copy any day. Columbia university has ranged his courses of study among the ten best in the nation.

NEEDLESS to say, he employs a lot of University of Oregon material. Chas. Glen Smith, '23, is principal, Harriett Baldwin, '28, supervisor of music; Louise Hollenback, '29, supervisor of art; Carin Degermark, '13, supervisor of physical education. Coach Darwin K. Burgher doesn't call Oregon alma mater, but his wife, Maurine Johnston in the class of '27, does. She met the coach here, when teaching, and married him.

Other members of the teaching staff, supplied by "Oregon," include: Louise Basford, '26, who has accomplished much in the realm of the underprivileged child; Luola Bengtson, '29, (married here to Attorney Hilding Bengtson); Christine Holt Parsons, '29, Winifred Andrews, '26, Ruth Ella Dickerson, Gertrude Butler, '25, and Eula Benson, '26.

Mrs. Jo Ralston Johnson, '29, came here with husband, Harold, when he became manager of Montgomery Ward.

Jasper Reynolds, class of '31, is the man who gives us our money. He is clerk at the Farmers and Fruit Growers bank.

Mrs. Treve Lumsden, ex-'19, who went in for journalism at Oregon, is now raising a family. Her husband is assistant to the state bank examiner.

WANTED

The alumni office is anxious to learn the names of the permanent class secretaries of the classes of 1930 and 1932. Through some error, these names have never been filed with the alumni secretary. If any member of either of these classes can recall the persons elected as permanent secretary for their class, will they please send the name to the alumni office.

Mr. and Mrs. Emerson Merrick own and operate the Merrick Motor Inn and Natatorium. "Mrs." was Beatrice Gaylord in the class of '18. They have a young daughter.

But this town, when all is said and done, is run by W. S. Bolger, ex-'22, (Bill back in Lemon Punch days). We should have mentioned him sooner. For he is president of the chamber of commerce. Also manager of the J. C. Penney Co. store, married and the father of two girls.

Doris Brophy, ex-'26, is the wife of Dick Green, pressman at the Mail Tribune and they have a family of three. Dorothy Myers, '26, has also taken to home life. Her husband, Max Peirce is with the Medford Investment company and they, too, are "proud parents."

Floyd Hart, ex-'20, is one of the managers of the Timber Products company. His eldest daughter, Charity, expressed a bit of Hart originality recently by leaving a Girl Scout meeting to take in a wrestling match. (She didn't tell father).

GEORGE GATES, ex-'19, is associated with his father, C. E. Gates in the Gates Auto company. His sister, Laura, now Mrs. Dean, ex-'23, also lives here. Another in the automobile business with his dad is Harold Grey, '19. He and his father, J. O. Grey, operate the Crater Lake Automobile company.

W. A. (Bill) Vawter, whose mother, Etta M. Vawter, class of '89, also lives here, is now in the real estate business. Frank Amy, member of the class of '81, is interested in mining and spins a good yarn.

H. H. (Hank) Pringle is manager of the Medford Construction company and the host of others, space does not permit mentioning, will have to make themselves known at the next homecoming.

P. S. Herb Lundy, ex-'28, just blew in en route to San Francisco, promoted from Portland office by United Press. Joe and baby, Michael, were with him.

Fraternities of the Depression Era

Last month Dean Onthank told how the students at the University are combatting the depression. In this issue he discusses the ways in which organizations on the campus are meeting the same challenge very successfully.

By KARL W. ONTHANK, '13
Dean of Personnel Administration

SORORITIES and fraternities have had an exceedingly difficult management problem within the past few years with which to deal. Despite some popular opinion to the contrary they have, in the main, been operating on an economical basis. Relatively little budget cutting could be done without either curtailing payment on capital charges or reducing the standard of living below desirable levels.

Social activities have been curtailed and very much reduced in cost. Kitchen and dining room costs have been cut as far as is hygienically sound. Women's houses are now managed by their house mothers. Last fall the house managers organization, which has been a great help especially to inexperienced managers in getting prices and suggesting approximate standards of management and cost, fostered a plan for cooperative food buying as a means of reducing costs. This was blocked by certain local opposition, but the showing of cooperative strength has been the means of securing more satisfactory food prices.

AS suggested above however, the major obstacle in the way of reduced house bills has been that of the capital charges on the house property. The few groups which rent have generally been able to negotiate reductions in rental charges in line with the times.

Most of the fraternities and sororities, however, have built their own houses, borrowing heavily to do so. They are now in the same position as thousands of others, business men and home owners, who built during prosperous times and now find themselves with greatly reduced income but under obligation to meet heavy fixed charges on property now heavily depreciated in market value. Furthermore, most of this property is assessed at high valuations, the tax charges alone in many instances amounting to $5 per month per member.

ACAREFUL cooperative study under the auspices of the house managers association, advised by the dean of men and others concerned, has resulted in adjustments which are making it possible for all but the very weakest of the groups to carry on. The proportion of failures is insignificant compared to the failures in business at large. Virtually all of the groups are paying interest. The majority of them are making payments on the principal. Current bills are being met, taxes paid, and insurance kept up. Fraternity loans are still among those which have not defaulted.

House bills have been reduced in some instances to as low as the dormitory level. In others, especially those with reduced membership and heavy capital payments, less reduction could be made, but in such groups individual arrangements are often made with students who cannot pay the higher prices, arrangements which permit them to work in the house in return for reduced charges.

Attempts in various institutions to reduce living expenses by "cooperative housing," "batching," and the like, have had much publicity. It is nothing new, as scores of distinguished alumni can testify for Oregon students to do their own housekeeping. Under present circumstances the number of students seeking to curtail expenses by doing their own house work is larger than usual. But when good room and board may be had for as little as from ten to fifteen dollars a month there are few students who cannot meet this charge. After all, students come to college primarily for other purposes than to do their own housekeeping. College work and activities and inexperience and irregularity in housekeeping lead not infrequently to interference with health and little saving in expense compared to the low prices now available. Hence the University has not encouraged wholesale development of independent or cooperative housekeeping but it has in numerous cases assisted students to work out their individual problems in the best way and will continue to do so for all comers. The most successful cooperative groups are those made up, for the most part at least, of students who receive food supplies from home.

STANDARDS of student social life as expressed in living expenses have adjusted themselves rather well to the demands of the times. It is true that co-eds sometimes note a falling off of "dates," and it is quite evident that the more expensive forms of entertainment have largely disappeared. But economically managed and low priced dances, reductions in theater admission charges, and the development of inexpensive recreational facilities in houses and in connection with physical education programs have played a part in the general effort to maintain a reasonably normal social life. "Dutch dating" and increased popularity of the less expensive forms of entertainment are noticeable. The depression and board regulations have combined to reduce materially the number of automobiles in use among students. Another significant help toward bringing down the standard of entertainment expense among students.

Attention to studies and scholarship have both been extraordinarily good despite financial worries and other distractions. Hard times have unquestionably served as an economic and moral spur in many instances. On the other hand, worries and distractions, and not least, lack of prospects for employment at graduation, have operated in the opposite direction. A large factor in the steady morale and attention to business which has prevailed has been a carefully planned program pointed toward this as an objective. This has been a major interest of the personnel division staff, but it could not have been achieved without whole hearted and effective cooperation between institutional officers and student leaders. Splendid cooperation and leadership has been had from many individuals and especially from such groups as the Association of Heads of Women's Houses, the Interfraternity council, and the House Managers' association. As never before, student leaders are recognizing the common interest of students and staff alike in the fundamental purposes of the University and are making a large contribution not only to the material comfort and emotional satisfaction of members of their groups but also to their personal and educational development, including the establishment of attitudes favorable to scholarship. A number of constructive projects are now under way. Among these is a plan for selective pledging by which fraternities expect to free themselves, in part at least, from the incubus of members who instead of contributing to the welfare and success of the group drag it down by scholarship failure and other deficiencies. The heads of both men's and women's houses have asked for a training course for scholarship chairmen. This will be organized next fall in a fashion which will utilize the resources of the University departments which can be of most help. This course is an outgrowth of the course now offered by the writer with the cooperation of other faculty members, designed primarily to be of service to house presidents and other student leaders in meeting the responsibilities of their positions. Even in its first and highly experimental year it has proven to be of significant value. Students in the course work on problems of student leadership which they confront in their positions. A body of exceedingly interesting and valuable information on the work of student leaders is being collected through the contributions made by members of this group.

A special effort has been made this year to give stimulating contacts with significant personalities and to supplement their classroom instruction and ordinary college life with varied and interesting cultural experiences.

The activities carried on under the auspices of the Associated Students were threatened by reduced income from fees and admissions but it was early determined to pursue a policy of maintaining activities and student participation in them just as fully as possible. It has been necessary to curtail travel, purchase of equipment, and the like, but by substituting, to some extent, competition with Oregon institutions for meets with those at greater distance, and by cutting expenses wherever possible without suspending the activity, it has been possible to carry on practically a complete program. There are as many teams and approximately as many participants as ever. Students seem to be having as much fun as usual if not quite as much spectacular competition. The regular concert series by visiting artists had to be suspended but, as noted above, substituted for it was a splendid series of concerts by our own, by no means unworthy, University talent. Debate, oratory, and publications have all carried on their normal activities. The Associated Students is emphatically a going concern with a balanced budget, in these parlous days no mean achievement.

Friends of University Organize

THE Friends of the University of Oregon is the name adopted by a group, made up for the most part of Eugene alumni and civic leaders, for an organization whose purpose is to help maintain the standing of the University of Oregon as a leading educational institution.

The organization, which was formed last October, with Dr. I. R. Fox, '21, of Eugene as president, is now preparing to swing into action again in the interests of the University. John Anderson, '23, is secretary of the group. Recently the group announced plans for a state-wide campaign to interest prospective students in the University and the courses offered in all higher educational institutions.

A membership campaign will be carried on in the state during the summer, the executive committee has decided. Anyone interested in the future of the University is invited to join. A membership fee of 25 cents, to cover overhead expenses, will be charged.

Following is the statement of the purposes of the organization:

"(1) Our sole objective is to help maintain the standing of the University of Oregon as a leading educational institution by keeping student enrollment at the highest possible level and by persuading the young men and women of Oregon to get their higher education in their own state.

"(2) To this end we are directing a state-wide informational service to bring before prospective students the advantages and the opportunities of coming to the University of Oregon for their higher education.

"(3) The Associated Friends of the University make no misrepresentations of the cultural and professional fields of study offered at the University or at other Oregon institutions of higher education. We have no desire nor intention to bring to the University students whose educational inclinations or professional intentions would make their enrollment at the University inadvisable.

"(4) Our state-wide program is directed entirely to bringing before students interested in fields of study covered at the University complete and unprejudiced information on what the University has to offer in those fields."

Thousands View New Art Museum

THE Murray Warner Collection of Oriental Art, famed throughout the country as one of the finest collections of its kind in existence, was officially opened to the people of the state of Oregon June 10, when the dedication ceremonies constituted one of the highlights of the commencement week at the University.

Thousands were present for the event and had the opportunity of inspecting the collection which is housed in nine rooms in the huge Museum of Art.

The collection, to which Mrs. Murray Warner, donor and director of the museum, has devoted a life-time and a fortune in massing, is now housed permanently in what is regarded as one of the finest museum buildings in the United States. The building, for which citizens of Oregon contributed approximately $200,000, is huge and impressive, and so that the delicate textures of the priceless objects may not be harmed by bright rays of the sun, the structure has no windows. A lighting system, which simulates daylight without the destructive rays, illuminates each room.

The most interesting exhibit, from the standpoint of the public, Mrs. Warner believes, is the impressive and beautiful "throne room." At either end of this room is found a throne, backed by rare and delicate screens, with rare old rugs for floor coverings. At the north is an enameled throne. Back of it is a tapestry woven entirely on a hand loom, delicate as the finest landscape painting which it represents, and decorated with threads of pure gold. The throne is one once used by an emperor in the Manchu period in Peking.

ON THE floor is a dark blue velvet rug, with designs skillfully worked in with strands of copper. Two huge vases, blue and white enamel, each with intricate designs, complete the ensemble.

At the south end of the room is another, more colorful throne. This is done in red lacquer, and behind it rises a screen—one of the rarest and most valuable known. The scene is done in jade of various colors. In the center is a magnolia tree, with blossoms in color. Two graceful birds, one on either side, both done in delicately colored jade, complete the picture. A silk rug with delicate open work is on the floor, and a whimsical note is added by the presence of a number of embroidered "elbow cushions."

Around the walls of this room are court costumes, coats and gowns into which gold threads and colorful designs have been woven with rare skill. One of these has a background of imperial yellow, a color permitted only on royalty.

THE PUBLIC is transported back 300 years in another room, and through a glass partition will look upon a Japanese princess about to enter her palanquin for a journey. The figure is waxen, and beautifully dressed. The palanquin, a carriage made to be carried by a long centerpiece on the backs of servants, is of itself a wonderful work of art. Inside are delicate paintings and each bit is carefully fashioned.

Another, more whimsical display, is that of nine hand embroideries, called "one hundred children." On a rich background of red satin are depicted lively little tots engaged in games. These are used only at marriage ceremonies, and are intended to be an omen of many descendants for the happy couple.

In the building are nine display rooms. Three of these are on the second floor, one of which is the impressive throne room. A picture gallery is on the mezzanine floor, while the first floor includes the Helen Hyde memorial room, the library, the Japanese print room, the Lacquer room, and the textile room. All were opened to the public during June and will be opened again in the fall after school starts.

Objects created in clay by the hand of man before the Christian era and found in ancient tombs—just one of the hundreds of fascinating exhibits to be found in the newly-opened Museum of Fine Arts, which houses the Murray Warner Collection of Oriental Art. These little clay objects contain heavy trappings of gold and are encrusted with a substance known as patina, by which a true indication of their age may be ascertained. One of the objects is a sturdy figure resembling a Roman more than anything else, another a figure of a slender maiden, Grecian in its grace, both proving that foreigners came into China over 2,000 years ago. A sturdy war horse, a man with Hebraic countenance, a jar for food and other objects are included in this intensely interesting display.

Board Asks Federal Loan Money

A NEW infirmary for the University of Oregon, fulfilling a long-felt need in the health department of the institution, and perhaps a new library, another project of paramount need, is envisioned by University officials providing federal grant and loan money may be obtained.

The application for the loan, together with loans for the other five institutions in the state system, amounting to approximately $1,500,000 has been made by the State Board of Higher Education, and Oregon educational circles are waiting anxiously for word from Washington, D. C., as to whether the government will approve the applications.

An infirmary has long been needed on the campus and approximately $12,000 has been raised by public subscription for the erection of such a building. In addition there is a fund of $50,000 conditionally appropriated by the state legislature two sessions ago which was appropriated contingent upon match funds to be raised from other sources.

The University infirmary, for many years recognized as inadequate for the needs of the campus, may be abandoned and replaced by a new $75,000 structure, if loans are granted the State Board of Higher Education from federal funds.

It will be more difficult to obtain funds for a new library, officials believe, because of the apparent impossibility of making such a project self-liquidating. However, University officials have gone ahead with plans and specifications for the building, and it is hoped that some means of meeting the requirements of the government may be found Nevertheless, board members are studying possible plans at present.

Other projects on the educational list are a $50,000 gymnasium at Monmouth Normal, a $36,000 gymnasium at Ashland Normal, a $130,000 training school at La Grande Normal, an infirmary at Corvallis, and a $300,000 addition to the medical school at Portland.

The board has also applied for a $355,000 student loan fund under the terms of the Wagner bill, to enable more students to borrow money and continue in school. It is believed that perhaps as many as 1,000 students would be able to obtain aid and remain at their classwork.

Student Flier Killed

George R. Howard, 22, a senior in business administration, was killed in an airplane crash June 11 at the Eugene airport. Howard had taken up flying with the expectation of entering the business end of the aviation industry. The crash occurred when the young pilot apparently lost control at about 1,000 feet altitude.

Paul Ager Gets Appointment

Paul W. Ager, '26, comptroller of the University from 1929 until last summer, has been named treasurer and comptroller of the huge Tennessee Valley corporation by President A. E. Morgan of Antioch college, who was appointed to head the large government project by President Roosevelt.

Since leaving the University, Mr. Ager has been taking advanced work at the University of Chicago. Mr. and Mrs. Ager (Marian Phy, '27) will make their home in Washington, D. C.

Two Oregonians Named

James Mason Dillard, LL.B. '24, and Edwin D. Hicks, '26, have been named as assistants in the office of the United States district attorney of Portland, by Carl C. Donough, who has recently been named to that post.

Alumnus in Congress

Word has been received recently of the election of Clark W. Thompson, ex-'19, of Galveston, Texas, to the United States congress from the seventh congressional district of Texas.

"pedagog of the old schoolmaster type." God bless the type and forgive the typographical errors that may need deletion today. Pitiful a generation of students so puny that it should ever find need to plead for relaxation whether in quantity or quality.

No orator was John Straub — but no student ever misunderstood the eloquence of that plain, direct vocabulary. No preaching from pulpit more surcharged with the Law and the Prophets than was his appeal for work and worth.

But to confine a word picture of the dean to purely classroom activities would be like attempting to circumscribe the waves of sight and sound that come tumbling out of space. There was an immensely larger sphere in which he both played and worked, a province that owned no parallelogram of plastered walls. Where John Straub was most keenly felt and appreciated was as advisor for the freshmen and as dean of men. It was therein that his real humanity and kindness were stamped upon many a lonely heart, and countless homesick boys and girls therewith strengthened and encouraged. No one will ever tell the whole tale. No one will ever chronicle the bitter secrets wrested from conscience-laden sufferers. Many an alumnus can avow that he feels yet that fatherly arm about him, that pat of the hand upon his shoulder — can still hear those half-bantering, half-warning, rallying charges that stiffened his resolves and rescued him from disgrace or failure.

It is such a Dean Straub that the alumni of Oregon remember with affection and reverence, envying this present class of 1933 that to them, the first to be graduated since his death, has fallen the privilege of commemorating him in bronze. And so the beloved dean is to occupy the niche in this memorial hall which metaphorically he has owned and so royally filled for so long a time in the hearts of his boys and girls, his perennial freshmen.

Master — yes, more than that, — Old Friend — yes, even yet more, — Elder Brother of your cycles of students, — Genius of Old Oregon and Prophet of the New, — Though bronze were by no means needed to assure us of the inspiration you ever breathed and spoke, — this image of you is dedicated that it might be a crystallization of the indelible impress you left upon us, your students, the end whereof can not be reckoned.

Magister, — Te Salutamus. Salve-Vale-Ave.

Tough Schedule Faces Webfoot Eleven

Writer Duniway gives us a hint of the things that Coach "Prink" Callison is thinking about these warm summer days, and shows where the sledding isn't going to be as easy as it might look on paper. Also, baseball, track, golf.

By BILL DUNIWAY, '32

"PROSPECTS for this fall?"

Prince G. (Prink) Callison, Oregon's head football coach, flicked a cigarette out into University street, stopped fixing the new registration tag on the steering gear of his car, and said nothing more for a moment, evidently surprised that any one but himself should be thinking about football on a sultry, summer day.

"Well," he said after a moment, "we'll have all but four of last year's squad back, but we'll have a tougher schedule—a much tougher schedule."

"Morgan, Bailey, Pope and Bowerman are the only four regulars we're losing, and we've got good men coming up to help take their places. We look pretty good on paper. But we've got a tough schedule, worse than last year."

Morgan — captain Bill of last year's eleven—has turned pro and will be playing with the New York Giants this fall.

Bowerman — quarterback Bill—is attending summer school on the campus now.

THE whereabouts of Bailey and Pope—Red and Spook to you—are unknown to the writer.

But this is supposed to be "advance" on Oregon's football season, not a review of last fall's play.

Prink's misgivings about Oregon's schedule are well founded. Three times will the Webfoots have to entrain for California, setting a new world's record for California invasions in the coast conference, it has been noted. Oregon has a game every Saturday for 10 weeks straight, except for only one breathing spell. And when Prink says that schedule's tough, he's not saying half enough.

Here's what the "Wandering Webfoots" will be up against this year
September 30—Gonzaga at Spokane.

October 7—Columbia at Eugene.

October 14—Washington at Seattle.

October 20—Idaho at Eugene.

October 28—U. C. L. A. at Los Angeles.

November 4—Utah at Eugene.

November 11—Oregon State at Portland.

November 18—Southern California at Los Angeles.

November 30—St. Mary's at San Francisco. Thanksgiving day.

If you gave the date of November 11 in the above list just a passing glance, go back and look again. Oregon State at Portland, the schedule reads. It's not a typographical error but an actual fact.

For the first time since 1917, the annual Homecoming "big game" will not be played on Hayward or Bell fields. It was Eugene's turn for the game this year, but now the city will have to wait until 1935. Portland gets the "big game" through the courtesy of Graduate Manager Hugh Rosson of Oregon and Head Man Carl Lodell of Oregon State as a "good will" offering to a city which has supported the football teams of the two schools for years without having had a chance to see those elevens play in their front yard.

Paul Starr

Prink Callison

With the traditional Homecoming game moved from the campus, University officials are still uncertain as to which game shall be the Homecoming contest here.

There is a chance that it will be the Utah game on November 4, but that may be shifted to Salt Lake City, making Oregon's schedule only that much more difficult.

BIG Mike Mikulak, who will make his last bid this season for all-American recognition at fullback, will again be one of the main cogs in the Webfoot grid machine. Bobbitt will be back to relieve Mikulak. Those speedy halfbacks, tan Kostka, Mark Temple, Leighton Gee, Art Clarkson, and Pepper Pepelnjak, will be on hand for Skipper Callison to pit against his opponents. To replace Bowerman at quarterback will be Terjeson, whose specialty is defense; Bob Parke, who will be converted into a signal-caller; and Whit Arey, last year's frosh star.

On the line, Callison will have Pozzo, Wishard and Morse, regulars, and Michak, frosh, at ends; Eagle, Nillson, Bishop and Nielsen at tackles; Frye, Cuppoletti, Clarke and Gagnon at guards; Hughes, Gemlo and Swanson, centers.

From the freshman eleven, Callison will have such outstanding material as Stew Milligan, halfback; McCredie, guard or fullback; Lundin, guard or center; and Bennison, tackle.

That's the roster as it stands today. And on paper it looks pretty good.

Track

Running football out of bounds and continuing a few feet, we're onto track—good subject for a few words.

Outstanding as Col. Bill Hayward started his 30th year as Webfoot track coach and trainer, were Oregon's defeats of Washington and Oregon State in dual meets. The Huskies were conquered by a slim margin, 69 points to 62.

Paul Starr, serving his second year as captain, breezed to victory in the sprints and Gardner Frye took the shot and discus to lead Oregon to success.

Two new dual meet records were set and one tied when Oregon swamped Oregon State 84¼ to 46¾ here on the day of the great civic banquet which honored Colonel Bill's 30 years of service on the campus. Warren Demaris, sensational sophomore javelin thrower, tossed the spear 204 feet 6 inches, and Paul Wagner ran the two-mile in 9:38.2 to set the new marks. Starr tied the former record in the 100-yard dash in :9.8, and then equalled the former world's intercollegiate record in the 220-yard dash in :20.9 despite the fact he was running against a cross wind and on a track soaked thoroughly by heavy rains.

In the northern division track and field championships at Pullman, Washington, Oregon placed second to the strong Washington State team, which won the conference competition as expected. Webfoot stars wrote two more records in the books during the afternoon.

Starr did the 220 in 21 seconds flat for a new mark, and again breezed the century in :9.8.

Demaris hurled the javelin 205 feet 9 inches for a new record.

So outstanding was the work of these two spiked shoe men that the Order of the "O," Eugene business men, individual students, the junior and senior classes, and the A. S. U. O. saw to it that they had new fields to conquer.

When the national intercollegiate track and field meet was held in Chicago June 17, Starr and Demaris were on the flood-lighted field competing for Oregon.

The two-man track team won 20 points for Oregon and put the University ninth in a field of 43 colleges and universities competing. Starr took second in the 100-yard dash and third in the 220, and Demaris came through with third place in the javelin.

Ralph Metcalfe, Marquette's Ace of Speeds and Olympic Games star, had to tie the world's record of :9.4 in the century, and set a new world's record of :20.4 in the 220 to beat out Starr. Demaris outdid himself in the national meet, flinging the javelin 209 feet 7½ inches.

Two weeks later, the Webfoot track stars won new laurels in the national A. A. U. championships in Chicago. Demaris took second in the javelin with a throw of only 203 feet 3 inches. Metcalfe again vanquished Starr in the sprints, the Oregon man taking third in the 200-meters and fourth in the 100-meters.

Baseball

In one of the rainiest seasons on record, Oregon's baseball schedule shrunk rapidly as game after game was washed out. Finally, in the last week of spring term, Coach Bill Reinhart was able to wring almost a game a day out of the dripping schedule to finish the year in good style.

Oregon split a six-game series with Oregon State in regular ninth-inning fashion, winning the last two games by one run margins when the series stood three games to one for the Orangemen.

The Webfoots divided a two-game series with Columbia university of Portland, and lost to Monmouth and Willamette.

Outstanding discovery of the season was Ron Gemmell, sophomore pitcher. Captain Duke Shaneman and Chuck Hoag worked behind the bat for Gemmell and Inman.

Golf

After falling prey to the A. S. U. O. economy axe, a group of campus golfers had their sport reinstated on a self-supporting basis. The eight-man team of Don Moe, Leonard Anderson, Don Olsen, Bob Near, Dick Near, Phil Mulder, Jack Mulder, and Bob Adelsperger beat Oregon State twice, but lost one match to Washington.

Degrees Conferred Upon 674

AT A colorful ceremony before a crowd of more than 6,000 degrees were conferred upon 674 students of the University of Oregon on July 10. Certificates brought the total number to more than 700, one of the largest graduating classes in the history of the University. Degrees ranging from bachelor of arts or science to doctor of philosophy were conferred by Dr. W. J. Kerr, chancellor of higher education.

The honorary degree of doctor of laws was conferred upon Dr. Joseph Schafer, superintendent of the Wisconsin State Historical society. It was conferred "in recognition of his wide and thorough scholarship, notable contributions to the history of Oregon and Pacific Northwest, and insight into present-day problems." Before going to Wisconsin, Dr. Schafer for many years was a member of the University faculty. Dr. Schafer delivered the commencement address before receiving the degree.

The degree of doctor of philosophy was conferred upon Winnefred Esther Bradley, Jasper; Harry Virgil Matthew, Eugene; William Donald Wilkinson, Corvallis, and Perry Daniel Wood, McMinnville. Other advanced degrees granted at the exercises totaled 63.

Students should take advantage of their opportunities for leadership in the state, as a means of repaying the debt they owe for the education bestowed upon them, Chancellor Kerr declared. The present civilization, he pointed out, has a much better chance of surviving than any other, because of the training in leadership now available. He called upon the graduates to "have courage to do what most needs to be done."

Taking as his topic, "Social Prognosis," Dr. Schafer visioned a day in the not too distant future when the economist, the historian, political scientist, sociologist and other social scientists, working together, will attain something of the reliability of the meteorologist in forecasting the future of mankind. "If by attacking problems such as legislation this battery of experts may enable us to look forward, in safety, past a limited succession of tomorrows, society should be supremely grateful," he declared.

Intellectual discipline alone cannot save the world, and too much faith has been placed in the efficacy of higher education to cure all our ills, Dr. Elam J. Anderson, president of Linfield college, told graduates at the annual baccalaureate address, held Sunday, June 9. He took as his subject, "Seeking Grade 'A' Values."

(Tourist class on many of the finest ships... How do they do it!)

When again will you be able to buy so many happy memories for so little?

Steamship rates are absurdly low. Living costs in Europe are way, way down. We've written a little book about it. We'd be happy to send it to you free.

It shows you how you can go... in dollars and cents costs. For instance... a good seat for the finest opera, about $1.50... admission to the Casino at Monte Carlo, about 40c... a cabine at many smart beaches, about 25c a day.

Can you go? Don't say no until you've read this book. That's where your trip starts.
