Why I earnestly recommend a career in life insurance

(Some questions answered by a New England Life Agent)

BILL GRISWOLD, college graduate in '48, was New England Life's 1954 Rookie of the Year, and had an even bigger year in '55. Read why he calls his work, "as satisfying a livelihood and vocation as could ever be desired."

What do you like best about the life insurance business?

"The fact that I'm a professional man, I'm my own boss, and there's no limit on my income. I'd had good jobs, from the laundry business to managing a theater, but none of them offered me half the opportunities I've found in life insurance."

How did you learn to sell life insurance?

"New England Life gives a new agent comprehensive training in his general agency and at the home office. In addition, he gets skillful field supervision. And he is urged to continue his insurance education through advanced courses and special seminars."

How about earnings?

"New England Life gives each new agent a generous training allowance. With some good breaks, I earned a five figure income in my first year. I'm now in my third year. My income has steadily increased, and I take a lot of satisfaction in serving a fine clientele."

Let us tell you more about the advantages of a career with New England Life. Write Vice President L. M. Huppeler, 501 Boylston Street, Boston 17, Massachusetts.

Postmen occupy a very hallowed position in my daily routine—perhaps in yours, too. Naturally they bring us those monthly slips of paper which tend to measure the extent of our creditors' trust in us. But mostly we like those occasions when we find a curious, yet friendly envelope among the ominous windowed-communications.

In reviewing some of the correspondence of the past months we cannot help but smile when we find such a multitude of reasons which prompted some alumnus to send a choice report of himself or others or to sharply rap our knuckles for some oversight or error. Mostly the real motivating force behind these letters is either self or university pride.

One letter we received criticised our Old Oregon Sports because the writer felt that we were merely presenting a "Hollywood Gossip Column" type of a report, and that it had no merit as being representative of the University. We think that he was actually trying to say, "Oregon is a fine university and I object to anything you do which seems to bring discredit to my school."

Occasionally we receive a complaint that an alumnus is dissatisfied with his tickets for an athletic event. Probably that is a case of injured personal pride. Most letters, however, express a very sincere thanks for some benefits that the writer has experienced.

Jim Hammond's recent letter, for example: "This is your Uncle Jim speaking to you this morning from out of a heart too full for a dull old head to teach it reason and restraint; it seems only a short time ago that I was walking up to the University campus with exceeding dignity, going to the different classrooms of Professors Johnson, Straub, Collier and others. And I thank God for the memories most precious and treasured about my wonderful Oregon and its people." Years have not lessened Jim Hammond's memories or his great pride in his school. (Mr. Hammond is a member of the Class of '98.)

Occasionally the postman will bring us a picture. We publish as many in OLD OREGON as we can accommodate. One alumnus asked us to please print all names in all group pictures. (This will be done as a matter of standard practice.) He seemed to have had great pleasure in trying to identify some persons who were in the picture and whom he had not seen since leaving Oregon some 30 years ago.

Beginning with the next issue we shall begin a "Letters to the Editor" feature in OLD OREGON. We invite you to write us your reactions and thoughts about OLD OREGON, the University and its program. Send us pictures, too. Family, individual, group, everything is welcome.

We are willing to wager that the first part of OLD OREGON that you read is "The Classes" section. In order that each issue has news about many members of the classes, send us frequent notes about Oregon alumni whom you see and know. Incidentally, Class of '25, take note—Lt. Colonel Frank Nesmith Davis writes that he has not heard from any of his former classmates and friends for a long time, and would appreciate hearing from many of you; his address—625 Carolina Avenue, Norfolk, Virginia.

Paul Patterson was a true son of Oregon. Nowhere was his untimely passing more keenly felt than at the University. For here was one of Oregon's most distinguished graduates who lived his whole life for his fellow man. To those who mourn the tragic death of this great man, may they find comfort and inspiration in the rich legacy of his selflessness of service, his high ideals, his resolute integrity, his strength of character, his devotion to duty and to the common good. To this son of Oregon—Paul Linton Patterson—this issue of OLD OREGON is dedicated.

Future of Favorite Campus Playground Appears Bright; City and University Expected to Share in Restoration

ONE OF the University of Oregon's most cherished traditions, the Millrace, may soon play a very real part in the campus life of the undergraduate. For the University and the City of Eugene are fast approaching agreement on a plan to restore the historic Millrace to some of its former beauty and importance to the campus scene.

Where once its meandering course provided canoeing, dunkings, picnics, bonfires and the traditional Oregon Canoe Fete, today's Millrace is a sluggish, unhealthy and unsafe eyesore for both the city and the University community. It now flows at a rate of about 20 cubic feet per second, and even drops below this pace during some parts of the year. This is not fast enough to carry away surface refuse which either falls or is dumped into the Race. Since the Millrace cannot be properly drained, it is impossible to keep it clean. Consequently city health authorities have declared it unsafe and unsanitary for swimming. As a result students today have no first hand knowledge of the recreation opportunities afforded by the old Millrace.

For the past several years the City of Eugene has spent nearly $8,000 a year in repairing the Millrace dam, near Judkin's Point, which separates the Race from the Willamette river. The severe rains of recent winters have so weakened the dam's walls that engineers will not guarantee how much longer they will hold. From the city's viewpoint this upkeep has not solved the Millrace problem, instead it has increased the community's financial burdens.

During 1955 two committees—the City of Eugene and the University—have been studying the problem of how to restore the Millrace in order that students and townspeople can enjoy it. The University Committee has concluded that a pumping system appears to be the only reasonable solution. Official city support for this same plan is anticipated in the near future.

The pumping plan which would increase the flow of water in the race is the result of a study made by Cornell, Howland, Hayes and Merryfield, engineering consultants from Corvallis. Proposed by the Millrace Committee of the ASUO Senate, the study was financed by the University. The ASUO Committee felt that an outside viewpoint, which would be impartial in its appraisal of the problem, was quite necessary if ultimate agreement between the City of Eugene and the University is achieved.

The engineering study was completed in September, 1955. Three alternative proposals, with the estimated costs for each, were outlined and presented to the ASUO Millrace committee. They were: (1) abandon the Millrace—fill in the channel, (2) speed flow by an improved gravity flow system. (3) speed flow with forced-pumping.

The committee realized that any plan adopted would only partially restore the Millrace to its former swiftness. For the Millrace flow was substantially affected after World War II when U. S. Highway 99 was relocated through Eugene via West Seventh Street to Franklin Boulevard past the University. The lower channel of the Millrace was closed off and in its place a 30-inch storm sewer from Broadway to the river was constructed, and a reserve outlet from the Millrace to the river north of the old Anchorage restaurant site was installed. Today, the storm sewer cannot carry off all the water of the Millrace to the river at an acceptable rate. And the reserve outlet was not constructed high enough to maintain the Millrace depth up to its traditional level. So a gravity flow system now, although generally recognized as a preferable arrangement, would be prohibitive in cost in comparison to the pumping system.

Actually the proposed pumping plan would provide a flow of 50 cubic feet per second in the upper race above Franklin Boulevard and a 25 cubic feet per second flow in the lower race below Franklin. An overflow dam would carry the excess water back into the Willamette River before it crossed under the highway.

The initial cost of the proposed pumping plan would be $40,000, and the annual maintenance cost about $7,000. Under the proposal half of the cost would be borne by the University and half by the City of Eugene. The University's share would have to come from contributions; already the ASUO Committee has tentatively pegged a special fund raising drive for later this year.

The engineering study included an estimate of how much it would cost to fill in the Millrace. The initial costs for filling and constructing a new storm sewer would be about $138,000, with annual maintenance costs on the sewer amounting to $8,000, which would probably have to be met by the city. To fill in the Millrace would be much more expensive than to restore it. This is one of the key arguments advanced by those who favor the restoration plan.

Cost breakdown for Millrace Pumping System:

Initial Outlay:

Pumping station .....	$33,290
Outlet control station .....	450
Silva culvert .....	750
Channel: lower section .....	500
Channel: upper section .....	5,000
Total .....	$39,990

Annual Maintenance:

Power .....	$3,300
Operation .....	1,000
Canal and Pumping Station .....	2,000
Bridge .....	1,000
Total .....	$7,300

The ASUO Millrace Committee has pointed out that one of the advantages of the pumping system proposal is that it will not require any additional fund raising drives after the capital costs have been met. The annual maintenance costs are within reach of both the University and the City.

The pumping plan has actually already been approved by the University and the City of Eugene Millrace Committee. The fate of Oregon's Millrace now rests in the lap of the Eugene City Council. If the council rejects the University's proposal, the only other alternatives are to find a new plan which will please the council, or fill in the Millrace.

If the plan is approved by the Eugene City Council, the move will climax a year long campaign by students and many alumni to create interest in the restoration of the race.

The high point of this campaign was the very successful 1955 Canoe Fete. Both students and alumni got behind the last year's big Junior Weekend project, and it dramatically proved that even bigger and better Canoe Fetes could be held on a restored Millrace.

On the strength of the success of the 1955 Canoe Fete, Bud Hinkson, of Eugene, ASUO president appointed the ASUO Millrace Committee headed by Sam Vahey, of Portland, ASUO vice-president. Included on that committee are J. O. Lindstrom, University business manager; I. I. Wright, University physical plant superintendent; Si Ellingson, Erb Memorial Union director; Fred Cuthbert, Professor of Landscape design; and Bass Dyer, Alumni director.

SPEAKING WITH THE same spirited incisiveness which made him a memorable and inspiring teacher and administrator, Dean "Jimmy" Gilbert, '03, presented to an alumni banquet in New York on December 8 the considered judgment and personal recollection of 50 years of devoted service to the University of Oregon.

The program was the result of a long-distance, coast-to-coast operation, which brought Dean and Mrs. Gilbert from Eugene to New York by air as guests of the University of Oregon Alumni Club of New York.

Tracing the "Builders of the University and Heralds of its Greatness," the retired Professor of Economics and Dean of the College of Liberal Arts revived Oregon's historic moments, from the year when Prince Lucian Campbell first became President through the succeeding administrations of Arnold Bennett Hall, C. Valentine Boyer, Donald M. Erb and Donald K. Newburn, to the day when incumbent President Wilson took over. In pointing up the changes in emphasis, in the schools, and in physical plant, the Dean provided a comprehensive picture of a growing University. Throughout, through the ups and downs of good and bad days, the irrepressible "Jimmy" sprinkled his anecdotes, his pungent limericks and his rare and high praise for the men who built, and are today building, the University.

President Philip Bergh '27, who executed the plans for the trip, was the evening's toastmaster, reading telegrams and letters from prominent alumni who joined in the spirit of welcome. He stressed the appreciation of the entire Club to the group of eastern Alumni headed by Dr. Claude Robinson '24 and John MacGregor '23, who by their generosity made the Gilberts' trip possible. He also presented Dr. Gilbert with a memorial album of the trip, which would be completed with pictures taken from arrival to departure and with signatures of all present at the banquet.

Former students Steele Winterer '26, President of A. & M. Karagheusian, and Maurice J. Warnock '26, Vice President of Armstrong Cork Company, came up with some hilarious footnotes to their training under Dr. Gilbert in Economics—a field in which both have been outstandingly successful. Russell Gowans '25, President of the Crown Cork & Seal Company, also scheduled to take part in this portion of the program, was prevented from attending by illness in his family.

Mrs. Gilbert was introduced, as well as all persons present, and noted especially were Professor Franklin E. Folts '19, of the Harvard University Graduate School of Business Administration, and Dr. W. E. Spahr and Dr. Clarence C. Clarke from the Economics Department of New York University.

Dr. Claude Robinson expressed the thanks of the entire Oregon alumni group to Dean and Mrs. Gilbert, not only for the pleasure of having them in New York for the banquet and many smaller gatherings, but also for their tremendous contribution over the years to the University and the State of Oregon.

His Life Was Devoted to His Fellow Man

Nowhere Is His Tragic Passing More Keenly Felt Than on the University Campus

ONE OF the University of Oregon's most distinguished sons, Governor Paul L. Patterson, member of the Class of 1923, died of a heart attack Tuesday evening, January 31, at the age of 55.

After making a speech earlier in the evening to a convention of the Assemblies of God at Portland's municipal auditorium, the governor was with three close political friends at the Arlington Club when he was fatally stricken a few minutes before 10 p.m.

Only three days before he had announced that he would be a candidate for the Republican nomination for the United States Senate, and had entered a contest to unseat Senator Wayne L. Morse, former Dean of the University of Oregon School of Law.

Paul Patterson became governor of Oregon December 17, 1952, succeeding Douglas McKay, who was appointed to President Eisenhower's cabinet as Secretary of the Interior. He served out McKay's unexpired term, and was elected in his own right to a four-year term in November, 1954.

His political career began in 1933 in Hillsboro as city attorney. In 1944 he was elected to the state senate from Washington county, and was quickly discovered to be a leader. He served in the state legislature four sessions—as chairman of senate municipal affairs committee in 1945, chairman of the senate education committee in 1947, and in 1949 as chairman of the highway committee. He distinguished himself as president of the senate in 1951, the position from which he succeeded McKay as governor.

STUDENT DAYS AT OREGON

Paul Patterson received his bachelor's degree from the University of Oregon School of Business in 1923, and three years later received his Doctor of Jurisprudence degree from Oregon's School of Law.

During his student days at Oregon he was widely respected for his leadership abilities. As a freshman Patterson roomed with two other young men, who were later to achieve national prominence—John MacGregor and Len Jordan. MacGregor, ASUO president in 1923 and former national president of Alpha Tau Omega won distinction in both World Wars, is now president of the exclusive 200-year old St. Andrews Society of New York. Jordan became governor of Idaho, and at present is a member of a joint United States and Canada international committee for the development of water resources in the West.

Patterson, with MacGregor and Jordan, lived in a small house near the corner of University and 14th Street—now occupied by the Erb Memorial Student Union.

Governor Patterson was affiliated with Tau Kappa Alpha, forensics honorary, and Alpha Kappa Psi, commerce and business honorary, while a student. All three—Patterson, MacGregor and Jordan—were members of Friars, senior men's honorary, when they graduated from the University.

LEADER IN SU CAMPAIGN

Paul Patterson was one of the half-dozen members of his class who led the first campaign for a Student Union. Although the group ran into difficulties in 1923, their dream was finally realized 27 years later.

Patterson was a member of Bachelordom, a strong local club started by ex-service-men; later he joined the Chi Psi Lodge, a social fraternity, before graduation.

Paul Patterson was one of Oregon's most loyal alumni. He was active in the affairs of the class of 1923. Here at a recent class reunion he greets two former classmates.

He was a frequent visitor to the campus, particularly during major campus weekends—such as Dad's Days and Homecomings. He attended the annual Homecoming game regularly, the latest being last fall.

On May 16, 1927, he married Georgia Searle Benson, member of the Class of 1924. Besides his wife, Georgia, he is survived by three children: Mr. Jim Fred Dillard of Tulsa, Oklahoma; Mrs. John W. Smithson of Lake Grove; and Paul L., Jr., of Tucson, Arizona.

Paul Patterson was an active Congregationalist, and Rotarian. He served as president of the Hillsboro chamber of commerce and as commander of the Hillsboro American Legion post. He was active in the Boy Scout movement. He served for a short period of time in the army during World War I and was on his way to officer's training school when the war ended.

The public funeral service was held Friday, February 2, at 2 p.m., in the House of Representatives in the state capitol building, Salem. More than 1200 persons attended the service.

Among the many admirers and close friends of the late Governor at the funeral were Governor Arthur B. Langlie of Washington, and four ex-governors of Oregon—Oswald West, A. W. Norblad, Charles A. Sprague and John Hall. Many of those men who served with the late governor during his first session in the state senate in 1945 were present, including others who were associated with him in succeeding years in the state government.

STATE LEADERS ATTEND

Oregon's top political figures were present, including—Secretary of the Interior Douglas McKay, Senator Wayne Morse, Representatives Walter Norblad and Edith Green, and ex-Senator Guy Gordon. Many representatives of foreign governments attended the funeral.

The Oregon national guard and air national guard served as honor guards at the service. Special honor guards of the Hillsboro American Legion Post, and Boy Scouts from Hillsboro reflected the deep respect the late Governor's home community held for him.

PRINCETON'S PRESIDENT HAROLD WILLIS DODDS

THE PURPOSE of a university is a subject that greatly interests many people. Regents, faculty, alumni, students, parents, patrons and friends all share a common desire to examine and to evaluate the principles of higher learning. Because this interest of many groups serves a good purpose—to seek ways in which universities may improve their value to society—OLD OREGON takes pleasure in publishing this address given by Dr. Harold Willis Dodds, president of Princeton University, at the May 13, 1955 Honors Convocation of the University of Michigan.

President of Princeton since 1933, Dr. Dodds is a graduate of Grove City College ('09), with graduate work at Princeton (A.M. '14) and Pennsylvania (Ph.D. '17). He was widely known as a political scientist before assuming his present position. After a brief period as professor of political science at Western Reserve, he was secretary of the National Municipal League from 1920 to 1928, editor of the National Municipal Review (1920-33), and in 1927 became professor of politics at Princeton.

What Is a University?

AMERICANS in general have an inadequate conception of what a university is and what it exists to do. Many seem to assume that a university is merely a galaxy of undergraduate colleges and graduate schools of arts and sciences, law, medicine, and so forth. Now if all that is required to qualify as a modern university is a congeries of individual schools under one president and one board of control, the justification for it is questionable. If the only cords that bind these parts together are a college cheer, a president, and a board of control, plus a chance to contribute to an alumni fund and belong to the university club in one's home town, there is little or no economic or educational basis for our complex universities. Certainly, if specialized training were the only consideration, it might be provided more efficiently in smaller and wholly specialized institutions.

But something tells us that it would be folly to turn our backs on our medieval ancestors and split up our universities into autonomous specialist schools or institutions. This is because the very concept of a university assumes an underlying principle which composes the various parts into a rational whole. A true university does have a theme which prevents it from decomposing into a multiversity.

A good way to gain an insight into any existing social institution, a method heartily approved by science, is to examine its origin and simple primitive form. So we can turn to Michigan's lineal forebears, the medieval universities, for light on what she is today.

Durable as the first universities proved to be—indeed they often literally thrived on adversity—no organization could have been less contrived, more spontaneous in origin. They were the unplanned product of the instinct for association in a common life of learning on the part of people who wanted to discover and share knowledge on the one hand, and on the other those who wanted to receive it. In this joint process of discovery and sharing is found the true essence of the university as an enduring social institution. It is society's agency for transmitting accepted truth and for discovering and sharing new truth.

The Universities of Paris, Bologna, Oxford, Cambridge, and their medieval counterparts began without a board of regents, or even a corporate charter. So innocent were they of the trappings of a modern American university that they were able to function without an organized alumni body, an Alma Mater sung with sober faces by voices slightly off key, or even a football team. Brawls with townspeople were an adequate substitute for organized programs of physical education and intercollegiate athletics. Taverns and wine shops were campus centers of social life; and for food and lodging the students were dependent on the tender mercies of landlords, who, according to the students, were apt to be demanding and avaricious; but who in their own minds, I presume, considered themselves to be but long-suffering victims of youthful, undisciplined exuberance, not unlike some harassed student landlords today.

STUDENT-FACULTY relations in the medieval university left much to be desired. Nevertheless, despite open rows between guilds of masters and guilds of students, a corporate spirit soon emerged. Because it tended to stir up new ideas, this new entity had to contend on occasion with both civil and ecclesiastical authority. At times in its struggle for self-government the university displayed a strategic adroitness beyond what a most hard-boiled university administration would dare to invoke today.

True, a bold intellectual explorer who attempted to break through the crust of medieval authoritarian theology might incur rough treatment at the hands of his university colleagues, as well as from bishops and popes. Nevertheless the early university did exhibit an embryonic capacity to stand by a more free-thinking colleague. Wycliffe was a practitioner as well as a scholar of what was considered subversion; yet Oxford, you remember, threw its protection about him, and it was years before external authority caught up with him. At the end, he could have used the help of an association of university professors to champion his cause, but that was not to come until later.

I have said that the first universities were not founded; they just grew. They were not constructed; they occurred in response to a basic human thirst for knowing more. But, I repeat, their survival power has equalled that of any other heritage which the Middle Ages left us, and it has excelled some.

THE PERIODS of history in which the universities have been most alive have been times of turbulence within and attacks from without. The way for universities to be at ease is to be asleep, and the periods of intellectual narcosis into which they have sometimes fallen might well have spelled the end of a less sturdy organism. "The slumbers of the English universities in the eighteenth century," writes an eminent historian, "were even more scandalous than the lighter and more broken slumbers of the Church." Yet both the universities and the Church proved that they were not dead and the period of slumber was but the prelude to revived activity.

It is difficult for some of the public to grasp the idea that a university exists for the purpose of entertaining differences of opinion rather than of achieving uniformity and intellectual regimentation. This was brought home to me by an incident which has doubtless occurred to President Hatcher under similar circumstances. I was testifying before a senatorial committee against a bill which had aroused strong popular feelings pro and con throughout the country. A few days earlier one of our professors had appeared in favor of the measure. This seeming violation of good order baffled one senator who sharply questioned me as to how it could come about that a professor was permitted to disagree with the president of his university, and still hold his job. I soon sensed that my explanation of academic freedom was serving only to deepen the senator's conviction that I was a pretty poor example of a college president. So I tried to laugh it off by saying that doubtless my colleague had been suffering a momentary aberration, but that he would work out of it in time. All I accomplished was to make trouble for myself back home, for the newspapers picked up the phrase and on my return to the university it required some effort to smooth the ruffled feelings of an old faculty friend.

WITHIN THE limits and ethics of the code of a democracy, a university can have no party line, yet its activity must be carried on under the compulsions and limits of a heavy sense of responsibility for truth. It is not its function to emulate Hyde Park Corner on a Sunday morning, or a political party, labor union, chamber of commerce, or League of Women Voters in a Monday-morning release to the newspapers. It has both the right and the obligation to demand competence and integrity of its members. The first duty of the academic profession—one of the greatest services it can render—is to demand rigorous standards of scholarly competence, objectivity, and integrity. Nor can it be neutral towards social and ethical

University of Oregon's greatest all-time basketball team—the "Tall Firs" of 1938-39—returned to McArthur Court, Saturday evening, January 14. This season's varsity was meeting California in the opening Pacific Coast Conference game of the 1956 season. It was just 17 years ago that the "Tall Firs" met a University of California team for the Pacific Coast title. In short order, Oregon's basketball squad of 1939 moved on to the Western Regional NCAA title, and finally, to the National NCAA title against Ohio State.

Many of the this year's student rooters at McArthur Court on January 14, were just beginning to walk when Oregon's famed "Tall Firs" were running roughshod over all opposition. However, student enthusiasm was loud and clear when the entire Court audience acclaimed Oregon's Tall Firs—Captain Bobby Anet, now a resident of Seaside; John Dick, a Commander in the Navy Air Corps; Laddie Gale, who lives in Salem; Bob Hardy, who still lives in Ashland; Wally Johansen from Coos Bay; Archie Marshik, now back at Oregon taking graduate study in the School of Education; Ted Sarpola, coach at The Dalles high school; and Slim Wintermute of Portland.

During their stay in Eugene, the team members were officially hosted by long time friend and former coach John Warren.

Co-op Store Buys Old "Side" Corner

The University of Oregon Co-operative Store has purchased the property on the northwest corner of 13th and Kincaid streets, presently occupied by the College Side Inn, Bill Baker's Men's Shop, Westgate Shoppe and the Smorgasbord. Announcement was made of the Co-op Board's action by Jerry Henson, '35, manager of the store.

Although the present quarters of the Co-op in the street floor of Chapman Hall are crowded, and will become inadequate within a few years, there are no plans at the present time to move the Co-op into larger facilities. According to Henson, the purchase was made principally because it was an "attractive investment," for which the Co-op Board has been accumulating funds for many years. He did point out that there was a secondary possibility that the Co-op might, some day in the future, utilize larger facilities on this newly acquired site.

Both the Co-op and the University are hopeful that adequate space can be found in their present location in Chapman Hall. Anticipated increase in student enrollment during the next 10 years will undoubtedly force expansion of the Co-op sooner than once believed, Henson stated.

The student-owned, tax-paying retail school supply business was organized in 1920. It was first housed in the Smorgasbord building on Kincaid just north of 13th street. Later, it moved to the corner of the College Side building. And in 1939, increased space needs to accommodate larger student enrollments forced the Co-op to seek larger quarters in Chapman Hall, renting the space from the University.

Several campus locations have been considered for a larger Co-op store. It may be that the University's administration and classroom building program over the next five years can provide the solution to the present Co-op store space problem.

Jerry Henson is the second manager in the Co-op's 35-year history, having succeeded Marian McClain in 1948. He graduated from the University of Oregon in 1935.

Wall Street Journal Chief Addresses Journalism Groups

The Wall Street Journal's decision to pay beginning reporters, just out of college, a minimum of $100 a week, starting this coming June, may prompt pay increases for journalists throughout the country. So declared Bernard Kilgore, president of The Wall Street Journal, who was the fourth professional leader of journalism during the term to address the School of Journalism students and faculty, February 16 at Allen Hall. His subject was, "The Wall Street Journal, the only National Newspaper in the United States, and Its Function in the United States."

Kilgore said that The Journal is not an economic paper, but is a report of what people do to make a living." He compared small papers with large papers in their similarity of production problems, but stated that some smaller newspapers often serve communities better than do large ones.

Big newspapers tend to be departmentalized and consequently suffer from lack of ideas, said Kilgore. The Wall Street Journal is trying to avoid this situation by keeping a wide open newsroom, he said.

The president of one of the world's unique newspaper enterprises, said that the field of communication is one of the most important fields open today, and that liberal arts courses should contain an exposure to journalism. "The majority of writing, reading, publishing, and printing that a student reads will deal in some way with journalism," he stated. Therefore, students should be able to interpret communications properly, he said.

Kilgore was also on the University campus to deliver the annual Eric W. Allen Memorial Lecture, at 2 p.m., Friday, February 17, before the 37th Annual Oregon Press Conference, co-sponsored by the Oregon Newspaper Publishers Association and the University of Oregon School of Journalism.

Oregon Dads Meet

Judge Carl A. Dahl, Portland, was elected president of the Oregon Dads club at the business session during the annual Dads Week End on the campus, February 3-4. Judge Dahl, who serves a two-year term as Oregon Dads Club president, follows Gordon Wilson, of Portland.

Elected vice president was William Hammond of Salem, and Robert Finlayson, of Eugene, was elected secretary. Dads Club executive committee, the members of which serve until 1958, include: Gordon Wilson, Jack Robertson, K. H. Miles, John Trolin-ger, Harry Norquist, Milton Rice, John Carson, Dr. Murray Burns and Judge William Dickson, all of Portland; Col. Laurence Fischer of Eugene, Guy Mauney of Coquille; Floyd A. Boyd of Klamath Falls; Dr. W. L. Lidbeck of Salem, and William M. Dielschneider, of The Dalles.

At the traditional Dad's Day Luncheon, President O. Meredith Wilson said that because of higher enrollments the University of Oregon may have to find new ways of teaching students and increase salaries to college instructors in order to maintain quality.

The President pointed out that the present student-teacher ratio may suffer at Oregon because of the constantly climbing enrollment. He warned that the continuing shortage of good instructors may also create a great problem unless something drastic happens soon to relieve this trend.

What the people of the state and of the nation need to realize is that more of the total population of the country want to attend colleges and universities every year, the president stated. Although it might be the hope of the University of Oregon not to grow beyond 6,500 students, he said, it would be illusory to assume that it can remain small.

President Seeks Larger Faculty

President O. Meredith Wilson has requested the Oregon State Board of Higher Education to make provisions for necessary increases in the size of the University of Oregon faculty to cope with the anticipated post-graduate and professional education enrollment beginning next year.

At the present time the State Board of Higher Education allocates the function of providing graduate and professional level education to both the University of Oregon and Oregon State College.

At Oregon, graduate work is offered in the schools of law, architecture and allied arts, business, health and physical education, liberal arts, music and journalism, as well as in the social sciences and humanities. The medical and dental schools, while academically a part of the University, are located in Portland and report directly to the Chancellor of the Oregon State System of Higher Education for all budgetary matters.

Oregon State shares responsibility in the fields of science and education with the University, in addition to offering graduate education in its own professional schools.

In making this request to the state board, President Wilson stated that "more and more people are going to continue education into graduate areas," and said that, in view of this, additional funds are needed to provide for an enlarged staff to offer the intimate professor-student relationship which graduate education requires.

Dr. Clark Authors New Biography on Matthew Simpson

Dr. Robert D. Clark, Professor of Speech and Acting Dean of the College of Liberal Arts, has written a new biography about one of America's memorable 19th century figures of the national scene, "The Life of Matthew Simpson."

The first president of the Methodist College, now DePauw University, Simpson was a conspicuous party to the politics of that day. A personal friend of presidents Lincoln, Grant, Hayes, Arthur and Garfield, he was known as one of the Republican Party's major advisers. One of the highlights of Simpson's life came in the spring of 1865 when he delivered Lincoln's funeral oration.

Dr. Clark has been doing research on the life of Matthew Simpson for the past 10 years. He spent considerable time in the town where Simpson lived as a boy—Cadiz, Ohio. He visited the campuses where Simpson taught, and many of the cities where the Methodist Bishop preached. The book was published by the MacMillan Company of New York, on January 31.

At Oregon for 13 years, Dr. Clark received his bachelors degree from Pasadena College in 1931, and his masters and doctoral degrees from the University of Southern California. He has previously taught at Pasadena College, Stockton Junior College, and the College of the Pacific. Dr. Clark was a Guggenheim Fellow in 1950 and 1951.

Librarian Writes College History

The Columbia College of Eugene, forerunner of the University of Oregon, is the subject of a detailed historical article by University of Oregon's Head Social Science Librarian, Perry D. Morrison, which appeared in the recently published issue of the Oregon Historical Quarterly.

Its life although brief, 1856-1860, Columbia College nevertheless boasted a colorful record. It gave the name "College Hill" or "College Crest" to the area of Eugene (west of Willamette Street and south of 18th Street) in which it was located.

According to Morrison the college had an enrollment at one time of 150 students, many of whom were destined to become prominent in state and local affairs. Most of

The Spirit of Service That Keeps on Growing

There is a heritage of service that is passed on from one generation of telephone people to another.

It had its beginning more than eighty years ago when Alexander Graham Bell gave the world its first telephone. It has grown as the business has grown.

Many times each day and night this spirit of service is expressed in some friendly, helpful act for someone in need. The courtesy, loyalty and teamwork that telephone people put into their daily jobs are a part of it.

Out of it have come the courage and inspiration that have surmounted fire and flood and storm.

We, the telephone people of today, are vested with the responsibility of carrying on this trust. It is human to make mistakes and so at times the job we do for you may not be all that we want it to be. But in the long run, we know that how we do our individual job and how we bear our individual responsibility will determine how we fulfill our trust.

For our business is above all a business of people . . . of men and women who live and work and serve in countless communities throughout the land.

Reaching for the moon

Once it meant the impossible . . .

today it's a progress report on scientific research

WHO DARES call anything impossible today? Not when research scientists are constantly seeking and finding new wonders to improve the way you live.

ONLY A DREAM YESTERDAY . . . reality today. A generation ago, Union Carbide scientists began taking oil and natural gas apart and putting the pieces together again in ways unknown to nature.

The result? A steady stream of entirely new chemicals . . . an average of one a month for the past 25 years. The benefits of these petroleum chemicals are everywhere—man-made textile fibers, amazing plastics, life-saving wonder drugs, enduring paints and enamels . . . the list is endless.

NOT ONLY CHEMISTRY has felt the touch of Union Carbide research. Alloying metals that make possible stainless and other fine steels, oxygen from the air for medical and industrial use, a variety of carbon products—all have been developed, made better or more abundant through UCC research.

AND THE MOON? The work of Union Carbide scientists in new metals such as titanium, in rocket fuels, and in the beneficial uses of atomic energy, is helping man reach in that direction, too.

Ask anyone who's been at it a while and he'll probably tell you there's nothing quite so satisfying as helping today's young people become tomorrow's citizens.

For whether it's the Boy Scouts, the Campfire Girls, the 4-H Clubs or any one of a dozen other youth organizations, folks who guide these groups seem to have one thing in common—the deep-down inner satisfaction that stems from the realization that "I'm helping to build something good." Many General Petroleum people have found this to be true.

Dr. David Forbes, '07, retired physician who practiced for many years in Jacksonville, Oregon, and came to Seattle, Washington, in 1942, died on September 26, 1955. He had been ill since suffering a stroke on September 2. He was 80 years old.

Dr. Forbes was health examiner at the Seattle port of embarkation before his retirement in 1952.

He is survived by his wife, two sons, and three brothers.

A fatal heart attack suffered by Samuel C. May, '19, professor of political science, emeritus, and director emeritus of the Bureau of Public Administration at the University of California, on September 30, 1955, in New York, terminated 35 years of public service and contributions to the University.

At the time of his death May was traveling to Italy, heading a delegation from the University, to assist the 860-year-old University of Bologna in developing a training program in public administration.

Samuel May was born in Portland, Oregon, on December 7, 1887. After receiving a law degree from Yale university in 1912, May practiced law for several years and entered the University of Oregon, from which he received his bachelor of arts degree in 1919. The following year he was awarded his masters degree at Columbia university.

In 1922 May became the guiding force in founding the University of California's Bureau of Public Administration, and in 1923 drafted Berkeley's city manager charter.

Besides participation in numerous organizations in the field of public administration. May's past activities include being chairman of the California State Planning board, secretary-treasurer of the social science research conference of the Pacific coast and executive vice-chairman of the California State Council of Defense.

J. Hugh Pruett, '22, noted Eugene astronomer, author, and educator, died at his home November 20, 1955. He would have been 70 next June.

A son of pioneer Oregon parents, both of whom came to Oregon in wagon trains around 1848, Dr. Pruett was born June 20, 1886, at Weston, Oregon.

Graduated from Linfield college in 1911, Dr. Pruett received an honorary doctorate at Linfield in 1946, after doing graduate work at the University of Chicago and the University of Oregon.

Perhaps best known to the public as a tracer of fallen meteorites, he was a director of the American Meteor Society and for many years plotted the courses of "shooting stars" passing through western American skies, using postcard and telephone information from eyewitnesses at widely scattered points.

In 1947, Dr. Pruett authored 127 astronomical articles for an encyclopedia published by Collier and Sons. He also was a regular contributor to scientific magazines, including Sky and Telescope and an astronomical journal published by Harvard University.

His only survivor is a sister, Mrs. Della Pruett Blaisdell of Portland.

Barristers of '35 Meet

Oregon's law school Class of 1935 celebrated its 20th anniversary during Homecoming weekend. On Friday evening, November 18, twelve of the original 24 members of the class with their wives joined Dean and Mrs. Orlando John Hollis at a special reunion dinner at the Eugene Hotel.

The 20th anniversary reunion for each School of Law class, now in its third successive year, is fast becoming one of the traditions of an Oregon Homecoming.

Members of the Class of 1935 present for the celebration included: Clifford S. Beckett, Neal W. Bush, John T. Casey, Elliot B. Cummins, Robert H. Foley, Alva C. Goodrich, Judge Glen Hieber, Arthur D. Jones, John W. Kendall, Roy J. Kilpatrick, William A. Palmer and A. Duane Pinkerton.

Louis Skinner, an attorney at Reno, Nevada, and a member of the Class of 1935, telephoned long distance from Reno during the reunion dinner to pay his respects to former classmates. Everyone present had an opportunity to greet him in the half-hour long conference.

Two members of the class, now residents of Eugene, who could not attend were Eugene city attorney John W. Pennington, and Wilbur P. Riddlesbarger.

Corwin Calavan, another member of the class unable to be present, had followed a doctrines which negate the basic principles of its existence, or indifferent to practices which would destroy it. Therefore a university can arrange no ideological compromise with Russian communism.

AS I HAVE suggested, to many honest people a university is upsetting and dangerous in that its members are always posing questions and propositions which challenge comfortable traditions and habits of mind. New knowledge is apt to be painful to mature people, not excluding professors in universities. "The mass of us lose early in life childhood's avid, if annoying, zeal for asking questions." Progress can be very disturbing. In science and technology, it may render established industrial processes obsolete, along with the capital invested in them. For example, the discovery that steam could make wheels revolve was no doubt painful to the early mill owners whose economic advantage depended on favorable water-power sites. Diesel engines and hydroelectric power have been painful to the owners of the coal mines. What the future application of atomic energy will do to a lot of invested capital no one can yet say; but it is bound to be unpleasant to some.

In the realm of ideas, new knowledge can be even more disagreeable. "God offers to every man," said Emerson, "the choice between truth and repose. Take which you please you can never have both."

A university is dedicated to the proposition that ideas matter. It supports the right, indeed the duty, to use our heads. It denies that a nation thinks with its blood, as Hitler boasted of his unfortunate and misguided nation. As one writer has recently expressed it, we may as well write "finis" to the story of Western civilization if we succumb to the belief that our future is determined, for good or evil, by vast impersonal forces outside the influence of the human intellect.

OF COURSE there are patterns of human behavior. Of course we often may feel that we are being swept along by powerful external currents over which we have no control. Of course events shape men. But let us never forget that men, through the power of ideas, also shape events. Nothing has been more disastrous in modern history than the adoration by Russia and her satellites of the Marxist superstition of economic determinism, the dogma by which ideas are made to be but the reflection of economic forces which set a "future for society regardless of the desires or thoughts of men."

Yes, ideas matter. But we might as well face it; a democracy is prone to distrust, even deride, intellectuals per se. The man who has a good head, and exercises his right to use it, is not apt to win a popularity contest on the strength of his brains alone. When Woodrow Wilson was running for the presidency, his scholarly background was a favorite campaign weapon against him. Hostile cartoonists habitually portrayed him in academic cap and gown, often with a schoolmaster's rod in his hand.

True, some intellectuals themselves have not been without blame in the matter. For example, in the generation between the two world wars, various writers who enjoyed a wide following (probably most of you have read some of their works) and who gloried in the name "intellectual," painted, in the words of Elmer Davis, "an almost unrelieved picture of a nation in process of dissolution." But the nation refused to dissolve; and later in World War II "some who had spent their lives proving that the United States was not worth fighting for went out and fought for it like anyone else." The mistake of this type of intellectuals is obvious. Their unwillingness to examine critically the adequacy of their knowledge and fully to test their assumptions led them to stop thinking too soon. In doing so they "alienated themselves from the world around them," in favor of their own little, artificial, self-made worlds. Thereby they fell into serious error. The trouble was, I repeat, that at a certain point they quit thinking and let their uncritical emotions take over. They were half-way intellectuals although very articulate people.

THIS WAS particularly true of a naive few who, blind to the cruel purposes of the Soviet rulers, allowed themselves to be seduced by the mystical pseudo-science and the false humanitarian enticements of international communism. Their failure was not that they were intellectual; their trouble was that they were not intellectual enough. When exposed to the pretensions of a revolutionary ideology, they evaded a thorough self-examination of their beliefs, and chose to neglect the totality of data essential to the solution of their problem. The moral is that when you use your head, use all of it.

But the apostasy of a pitiful few should not blind us to society's need of men of curiosity and of ideas. The times call for a new knowledge as never before. Of course our society requires all the courage and idealism it can muster, but alone these qualities are of no avail against the modern weapons of tyranny. As the President of the United States has reminded us, these weapons are not limited to military armaments; indeed armaments are impotent except as there is intelligence and will to use them or withhold them wisely. Had our knowledge of other nations of the world been greater (and in this I include all Western peoples), had our views been based less on old wornout knowledge and attitudes, our psychological warfare over the past decade would have been more successful and our world position stronger today. This is surely no time to slow down the pursuit of knowledge; to rely on partial or faulty knowledge even when it masquerades as common sense.

THE GOLDEN thread which keeps a university from decomposing into a multiversity is similar to that which makes an integrated personality a whole man. It is the essence of liberal learning diffused throughout the branches that binds a university together and in so doing unifies the diverse aspects of human life. We need this unifying principle terribly today if we are to hold our society together. As a wise colleague of mine has written, the power to contain the divisive forces threatening the wholeness of our social order lies only partly in the realm of public and governmental policy. Unless the individual man can defend his integrity as a man against the encroachments of specialization and narrow concentration, how can our factious society do any better in preserving its unity against the centrifugal forces which would tear it apart? In all Western history the one institution that has succeeded best in sustaining the wholeness of life is the university. That is still its function today. If it fails no other instrumentality is available to take its place. But it will not fail, and one reason is that Michigan will not fail.

It is a serious and arrogant error to assume that knowledge in one particular segment of learning, however vast and deep, gives wisdom in regard to the complex interrelations of life. Therefore the advice to use your heads entails more than accumulating and cataloging factual knowledge; for such knowledge is but the corridor to something ever more difficult to acquire, namely wisdom. "Knowledge comes," wrote Emerson, "but wisdom lingers." The widely publicized Kinsey Reports may increase knowledge—I am not competent to pass on their scientific methods or findings—but all their tables and charts do not add up to wisdom. They don't tell us what to do about sex even for the sake of our own durable selfish happiness, let alone the happiness of others under the Golden Rule. For the wisdom which makes for happiness, the readers of these reports must look to other sources. The true function of knowledge is to be the servant of wisdom; it is not a substitute for wisdom; split off from wisdom it can destroy us.

THE ULTIMATE goal of a true university is wisdom. Its search proceeds along many paths from many directions and points of origin. But the essence, the hallmark of a university is that these paths converge at a common point, a homeland of the soul, as it were, wherein the several aspects of the terrifically complex and diverse, but miraculously articulated, human personality meet and are resolved.

Wisdom is difficult to define; it is even hard to describe what one means by it, and I shall not attempt to do so now. Nevertheless it has a meaning that we all comprehend in some manner, and we recognize it when we see it. Its essence is not alone capacity to command our physical environment. It relates to ultimate goals and the means by which we may attain them. Its basis is the unity of knowledge in a pattern that enables a human being to put all his resources to work. In his Religio Medici Sir Thomas Browne wrote three hundred years ago: "Wisdom is God's most beautiful attribute; no man can attain unto it, yet Solomon pleased God when he desired it."

That those of us who teach and study in colleges and universities should be searching for wisdom as well as knowledge may seem pretentious. But I hope that all of us involved either in giving or receiving an education will never be satisfied with any purpose less ambitious. Who will deny that an education that aims at wisdom is an education that deserves well of the Republic?

Rio Linda, California; Kip Wharton, of Cascade Summit; Sally Jo Grieg, of Salem; Darrell Brittsan, of Medford; Jerry Maxwell, of Eugene; Gerry Sabey, of Seaside, and Dick Gray, of Portland.

This Committee was authorized to hire the engineering firm for the study. It also chose the pumping system restoration proposal from among the three alternatives.

Subsequently, the pumping proposal was approved by the ASUO Senate and by the University President O. Merdith Wilson last fall. The Alumni Executive Committee held a special session during Homecoming and gave its okay to the idea.

Last December the ASUO Millrace Committee presented the proposal to the City of Eugene Millrace Committee which approved it for recommendation to the Eugene City Council.

Robert Lemon, '38, chairman of the City of Eugene Millrace Committee, has said that the restoration project would easily receive the approval of the state highway department since the pumping plan does not interfere with a proposed highway by-pass planned for construction in the future. Part of the by-pass project would be the construction of a bridge over the Willamette river at Judkin's Point.

It has been estimated that once the City Council votes on the Millrace question, restoration of the Race could conceivably start as early as the summer of 1957.

While waiting for the City Council to approve the restoration plan, the University has optimistically gone ahead with plans for future recreation on the Millrace.

In October, President Wilson authorized the expenditure of $2,000 from the Student Union-Educational Activities Fund for a boathouse to be built during Winter term along the north bank of the Race, east of the physical plant. The cost includes construction of the house and the purchase of four canoes. Capacity of the boathouse will be about 20 canoes. If the construction schedule is met, students should be able to go canoeing on the Millrace by spring.

Administration of the boathouse and other future recreation facilities along the Millrace will be under the direction of the student union as part of its recreation program. However, facilities will be available to both students and townspeople.

Ground-breaking ceremonies for the new boathouse were held in November during Homecoming. Orville Thompson '35, President of the Alumni Association, turned the first shovelful of dirt. Members of the ASUO Millrace Committee and the Alumni Executive Committee were present at the ceremony.

Plans have also been made for a new

University Student Newspaper Has 56th Anniversary on February 12

February 12, 1956, was the 56th anniversary of the Oregon Daily Emerald, which grew from one issue a week student newspaper to a full-fledged campus daily—so observes Anne Ritchey, '56, of Salem, a senior in journalism and News Editor of the Oregon Daily Emerald, in a recent Emerald story.

According to Miss Ritchey, smallest of the issues ever published under the name Emerald were four-page, five-columns—and the largest single issue ever published was the special Christmas, 1955 edition of 36 magazine-size pages. The Emerald news editor notes that the University of Oregon newspaper was born with the 20th century, its immediate predecessor being the Oregon Weekly which was a product of much hard work and idealism for students of that era who wanted a student publication at Oregon for so many years.

The first administration-allowed student publication on the campus was The Reflector in 1891, a joint effort of the Laorean and Eutaxian societies. After its early death came The Bulletin, a monthly endeavor, which attempted to report campus happenings, and as News Editor Ritchey writes, was the beginning of the first news-oriented student publication at Oregon. However, both the Bulletin and its predecessor, The Reflector, were under strict supervision of the faculty and administration. But the appearance of the Oregon Weekly in 1900, which was controlled by students, created the direct lineage down to present day, student-operated Oregon Daily Emerald.

The first appearance of the name Oregon Emerald was on September 29, 1909, when the campus weekly began appearing twice a week to meet increasing student needs for more frequent news. It is believed that the name "Emerald" came from Joaquin Miller, nationally-famous Oregon poet of that time, who used the word constantly when referring to the state of Oregon.

The Emerald started publishing three times a week in 1912, when it reduced page size to five columns for a period of 14 issues, thereafter expanding to eight columns, Miss Ritchey writes.

In 1941 the Emerald again reverted to the 5-column format, or tabloid size, which has been the consistent format ever since. In 1921 the Emerald went daily, delivering its daily copies to dormitories and the Co-op store. This was the beginning of student body funds being applied to finance distribution costs.

An Oregon Sunday Emerald appeared in 1922, edited by the late Ernest Haycox. His son, Jim Haycox was Emerald editor in 1953.

Of the several homes which have housed Emerald staffs and equipment over the years, probably none was better loved than the traditional Emerald "Shack," a wooden structure north of Friendly Hall, which Allen Hall now occupies. When the old School of Journalism building became a reality, the Emerald offices were moved into the basement of this building, which adjoined the old McClure Hall and soon acquired the label of "Shack" from its predecessor.

In 1947, a quonset hut, just south of the Journalism building was constructed for the Emerald staffers. When in 1953-54 McClure and the old Journalism building were torn down, to make way for the new Allen Hall, the Emerald was moved again down near the Commonwealth Hall into more quonsets. This was short-lived. For the student daily's offices were soon moved into another quonset alongside Deady Hall, where now the Psychology Department conducts animal experiments.

Came the fall of 1954, and Oregon's campus daily moved into "a shiny new office with venetian blinds and fluorescent lights," states Miss Ritchey. Here, today's Emerald staff reposes, "looking, for all the world, like a professional newspaper with its copychute, straight copydesk and averting layout tables, not to mention three telephone numbers," Miss Ritchey concludes.

"Anchorage" to be built along the north bank of the Millrace. The plans were created by University architecture students under the direction of Professor W. S. Hayden. The plans which have been turned over to the ASUO Millrace Committee call for an enlarged boathouse, a snack bar, banquet dining rooms, and parking space.

This development is one of several major steps planned by the ASUO Committee to turn the Millrace area into a true recreation spot for both Eugene and the University. Complete landscaping of the upper Millrace area is also included in the Committee's plans.

the instruction of Columbia College was on a college-preparatory rather than collegiate level.

In Morrison's mind, the life of the institution was characterized by "financial fiasco, two fires, and a felony." All the disasters can be traced to the influence of the tensions which preceded the Civil War upon a small college in frontier Oregon.

The felony was an attempted homicide by one Professor Ryan which ended the active life of the college. Ryan, states Morrison, was a man of "strong and militant Southern sympathy," who served briefly as president of the institution in its latter days. In a violent protest over certain letters which had appeared in the People's Press. Ryan shot at its editor, B. J. Pengra. The bullet missed Pengra, but the college did not survive the incident.

Gives Scholarship

Dr. Neal F. Comish, Professor emeritus of Business Administration, has announced that he will award a $1,000 scholarship to the junior student with the highest academic standing in retail merchandising. The Comish scholarship award will be made at the annual meeting of the Oregon Retail Distributors institute which meets on the University campus February 20.

Professor Comish, before retiring in 1953, organized the Oregon Retail Distributors Institute, and served as its executive secretary. He was a member of the University of Oregon faculty for 21 years. Dr. Comish received his bachelor degree from Utah State College, and his master's and doctoral degrees from the University of Wisconsin.

Son Scores High

Daniel Ch'en, 18-year-old son of Dr. S. W. Ch'en, Professor of Physics, was recently notified that he is one of 40 national finalists in the Science Talent search, conducted annually by the Science Club of America. Ch'en, a senior at Eugene High School, plans to enter the University of Oregon next year to prepare for a career as a university professor.

Young Ch'en entered a project in the national competition on "The Determination of Curie Points of Alloys of Iron and Nickel by Using an Induction Furnace." The finalists were chosen from a national field of 20,828 students by means of a test, references and their projects.

On March 1, Ch'en will take part in the five-day science talent institute in Washington, D. C. Cash awards will be given winning students toward their future science education by the Westinghouse Educational Foundation. Top prize is $2,800, and second is $2,000. Next eight winners will receive $400 each, and the remainder, $100.

Attend Conference On Education

Four members of the University of Oregon faculty are scheduled to participate in the February 19-23 meeting of the American Association of School Administrators at Atlantic City, New Jersey.

Dr. John Pierce-Jones, Assistant Professor of Psychology, is a member of a special evaluation staff for the conference. A research grant from the Kellogg Foundation of Battle Creek, Michigan, provided the necessary funds for the evaluation of the association's activities.

The program in school administration as carried on in Oregon through the support of the Kellogg Foundation will be a major discussion subject in which Dr. Donald Tope, Professor of Education and Director of the Kellogg Foundation activity in the state, will participate.

Dean Paul B. Jacobson of the School of Education will be attending the meeting of the National School Boards Association in conjunction with the school administrators meeting.

Dr. Miles Romney, Professor of Education, will extend the invitation to speakers to attend next year's conference which will be held at the University of Oregon.

Will Go to Mexico

Dr. Leavitt O. Wright, Professor of Romance Languages, has been appointed to the summer session teaching faculty of the University of Guadalajara, Mexico, for this coming summer. At Oregon since 1926, Dr. Wright will teach a class on Don Quixote and two reading courses.

Dr. and Mrs. Wright will spend most of the summer in Guadalajara. American students comprise the majority of those attending the University during the summer sessions. They live with Mexican families and attend the local festivals and public events in addition to their regular classes.

Elected President

Dr. Quirinus Breen, Professor of History, was elected president of the American Society of Church History at its recent convention in Washington, D. C.

At the University of Oregon since 1938, Dr. Breen is the second Oregonian in the 68-year history of the organization to hold the post. Kenneth Scott Latourette, currently associated with Yale University, is the other Oregonian to have served the society as president.

As president, Dr. Breen will have the responsibilities for planning the organization's next convention, which will be held in St. Louis, Missouri, in December, 1956. At the convention he will deliver the traditional presidential address to the society's delegates.

The American Society of Church History meets each year in conjunction with the American Historical Association.

Cited By Magazine

Assistant Professor of Architecture Lionel Chadwick was recently named by Fortnight magazine as one of 38 men in western states prominent in public service.

Chadwick was recognized by Fortnight for his work last summer directing a Quaker work camp in mountainous country about 60 miles north of Mexico City. He supervised college students and Mexicans in projects which included vaccination of children, recreation and art classes, and construction of an irrigation canal.

The Chadwick family plans to spend this coming summer helping in the rehabilitation of the Vera Cruz, Mexico area, which was heavily damaged by recent earthquakes.

Writes Textbook

A second edition of the textbook, "The Psychology of Human Differences," by Dr. Leona E. Tyler, Acting Head of the Psychology Department, was published in mid-January by Appleton-Century-Crofts, publishers of New York City.

This edition of Dr. Tyler's book includes a large amount of new research material from the field of differential psychology. The illustrated textbook numbers 545 pages. The new material fills more than half of the volume.

Appointed Editor

Professor Ivan M. Niven, of the Mathematics Department, has been appointed associate editor of the Pacific Journal of Mathematics, a research publication. He will hold this position for a three-year period.

He has also recently been named chairman of a three-man nominating committee for 1957 by the Mathematical Association of America.

During the current school year, Dr. Niven is doing research work at the University of California under a Ford Foundation fellowship from the Fund for the Advancement of Education. He has been on the Oregon faculty since 1947.

Talks To Publishers

Assistant Professor of Journalism Carl C. Webb addressed the delegates attending the mid-winter conference of the National Editorial Association at Chandler, Arizona, January 20. His topic was, "Your Newspaper Cost Studies." He has been conducting newspaper cost studies for the N. E. A. over the past five years.

New Yorkers Honor Artist Rolf Klep, '27 With a "Kleporama"

One of the nation's top military and scientific illustration artists, Rolf Klep, '27, was honored at the October 20 dinner meeting of the New York Alumni Club, which was held at the Hotel Barbizon.

Highlight of the evening was the showing of more than 130 color transparencies of Klep's artistic achievements from grade school to his present-day double-page spreads appearing in Life, Look, Colliers, and other leading publications. The slide show was aptly titled, "Kleporama."

New York Alumni Club's president, Philip Bergh, '27, classmate and long-time personal friend of Klep's, introduced the honored member of the New York group by paying tribute to Rolf Klep's pre-eminence today in the rendering of highly scientific and accurate illustrations for military and commercial publications. A recent example of Klep's work is a nearly full page, four-color painting of the U. S. S. Forrestal, one of the navy's newest aircraft carriers, which is now appearing in a full page Shell Oil Company advertisement in leading national magazines.

Explanatory comment during the slide presentation was given by Phil Bergh, and supplemented in a most vivid and clear manner by Klep's own explanations of the purposes and uses of various pieces of art. Klep described how he assembled the necessary information for technical illustrations, how they were rendered, and finally how they were published.

"Kleporama" was divided into the several phases of Rolf Klep's art career: commercial art at Portland and Chicago, commercial art at New York in 1930s, navy and service art in wartime (Klep served as a Lieutenant Commander in the Navy during World War II), art for postwar military articles, postwar art for commercial ads and stories, renderings and details of liner, "United States," post-Korea military art, illustrations on atomic power, and art on space ships and inter-planetary travel.

Thirty-four New York alumni attended this meeting to honor Rolf Klep, in spite of an unseasonable storm and transportation difficulties. Among the alumni present was Leonabel Jacobs, '11, distinguished East coast portrait and water-color artist.

Portland Institute Now Set for March 10

University of Oregon Alumni of Portland have announced some changes in the forthcoming Alumni Institute now set for Saturday, March 10, rather than March 3.

This year's Alumni Institute will commence at 1 p.m. with a luncheon at the Congress Hotel, instead of the Multnomah Hotel, as previously announced. The program will begin about 2 p.m., with President O. Meredith Wilson, presiding as moderator.

Dean Sidney W. Little of the School of Architecture and Allied Arts will describe the current status and future plans for campus development. Dr. Ray Hawk, Associate Director of Student Affairs, will discuss student living on the campus today. A highly concentrated course in speech will be conducted by Professor W. A. Dahlberg, of the Speech Department. Oregon's fleet-footed distance runner, Jim Bailey, whose home is Sydney, Australia, will speak about the University of Oregon from a foreign student's viewpoint.

The Institute program will conclude with a cocktail hour given by the Portland Alumni Club from 4:30 to 5:30 p.m.

University of Oregon alumni living in the Portland area, or who expect to be in Portland on March 10, are urged to attend the 1956 Alumni Institute. Further information may be obtained from Bill Bradshaw, Trust Department, Main Branch, U. S. National Bank of Portland.

Hall Joins Center

Dr. Harry K. Newburn, former president of the University of Oregon, now Director of the Educational Television and Radio Center of the Ford Foundation at Ann Arbor, Michigan, recently announced the appointment of George L. Hall '39, former acting Dean of Men of the University, as Director of Development for the Center.

Hall, a government foreign education expert, was assistant and acting Dean of Men on the campus from 1945 to 1947, and in the School of Education in 1947-48, for graduate study. He received his Bachelor of Science and Doctor of Education degrees from Oregon, and his Master of Science degree from Northwestern University.

Both Hall and his wife, Wyona Eslow Hall, are native Oregonians. Mrs. Hall is a 1940 graduate of Oregon.

Another prominent member of the class, not able to attend, is Howard I. Bobbitt, now a practicing attorney. Bobbitt, who for many years was an FBI agent, and headed up the Portland FBI office as special agent, is best remembered for his football record at Oregon as a center on the squads of '29, '30, and '31.

MARK OF A TRUE CHRISTIAN

Rev. Julian Keiser, pastor of the Salem First Congregational church, officiated at the 34-minute service. Rev. Mr. Keiser said that the late governor, "had the integrity of character which is the mark of a true Christian and without which a society soon becomes hopelessly corrupt."

The pastor added "that his entire life was characterized by a deep devotion to the meaning of citizenship in a democracy. He gave unstintingly of himself in every possible movement for the good of his community, state and nation. He was particularly concerned about the development of minds and characters of Oregon's youth."

Rev. Mr. Keiser said, "There is for us the comfort and strength of having witnessed a life well lived. We can be thankful for the gifts of Paul Patterson to us: The selflessness of his service, his high ideals, his resolute integrity, his strength of character, his devotion to duty and to the common good. All these and more are left in his legacy to each of us to appropriate now to ourselves."

Senate President Elmo E. Smith, 46-year-old John Day weekly newspaper publisher, succeeded the late Paul L. Patterson as governor of Oregon. Smith took the oath of office as governor at 9:36 a.m., Wednesday, February 1, 1956.

UNIVERSITY MOURNS LOSS

An entire state mourned over the untimely death of its governor. But nowhere was the grief more pronounced than at the University of Oregon.

President O. Meredith Wilson summed up faculty and student feelings alike in his statement:

"We are all shocked to learn of the death of Governor Patterson. He was no ordinary public servant. With patience, understanding, and quiet dignity he has assembled his facts and worked for the welfare of the state. Apparently in his tireless efforts to serve us, he wore his life away.

"He will be missed everywhere in Oregon but nowhere more than at the University, his alma mater, of which he was always a friend and benefactor. The governor and his wife have long occupied a special place in the affections of the campus. It is difficult for me to express adequately to his wife, children and friends the loss which we feel in his passing. The University will miss him, for he was a real statesman."

Dr. John R. Richards, chancellor of the state board of higher education since last July, issued the following statement regarding the death of Governor Patterson:

"Throughout his adult lifetime, Paul Patterson evidenced real leadership in advancing the education of his people, but it is in the broader sense as a statesman and friend that we share the tragic loss with all Oregonians."

FACULTY VOTES RESOLUTION

The Faculty of the University of Oregon at a special meeting on February 1, adopted by unanimous vote the following resolution of recognition to the late Governor Paul L. Patterson, and sympathy to his wife, Mrs. Patterson. The resolution was presented to the faculty by Dr. James H. Gilbert, professor emeritus of economics, and one of the late governor's teachers while Patterson was a student at the University:

"Whereas, on January 31, 1956, death came suddenly to Paul Linton Patterson, distinguished alumnus of the University of Oregon, well known to and highly esteemed by many members of the Faculty, and

"Whereas, Governor Patterson, throughout his long career as legislator and chief executive of the State showed a deep sincere interest in higher education and gave consistent and loyal support to measures affecting the welfare of state institutions of higher learning, and

"Whereas, the University of Oregon has always been proud to point to his career of faithful and enlightened public service as reflecting credit on his alma mater.

"Now be it resolved by the University of Oregon Faculty that we take official recognition of the tragic loss to the Commonwealth of Oregon at his untimely death when many more years of public service seemed to lie ahead, and

"Be it further resolved that we express to Georgia Benson Patterson and her family our sincere sympathy on the occasion of this their tragic bereavement."

ASUO student body president Bud Hinkson issued the following statement on Wednesday, February 1, concerning the sudden death of Governor Paul L. Patterson:

"The Governor is dead. Our state has lost a great man; a concerned, well informed administrator; a sincere, forthright politician; and above all, a real leader.

"The Oregon student body shares with the Patterson family, and with all the people of Oregon, this very deep personal loss. For with the passing of Paul Patterson, passes an especially close friend of this University.

"We could dwell on his contributions, but words are generally cheap in the tribute to such a figure—and certainly here is a man for which sufficiently expressive words are hard to find.

"So let it suffice to say what we are here acknowledging his contribution; and implied in our acknowledgement is the hope that in the spirit of Paul Patterson, this university and this state will continue in its present upward course."

CONVOCATION FOR PATTERSON

A campus wide convocation was held Tuesday afternoon, February 7, 1956, in the Erb Memorial Student Union, to pay special tribute to the late Paul L. Patterson. Four members of the faculty participated in the memorial service.

Dean Orlando J. Hollis, of the School of Law, gave a personal sketch of Governor Patterson's life, describing his life of service to the University, to his community, and to the state.

President O. Meredith Wilson, described Paul Patterson in terms of a great public servant. The president said, "There was little time in his life which was not invested in public service."

The president spoke of Governor Patterson's philosophy of public life: that each person owes a debt of service to both his community and government which can be paid only through public service.

Carlton E. Spencer, former professor of law, told of Governor Patterson's student days at Oregon. He told of Paul Patterson's outstanding record as a student, and the respect in which others held him. "There was no resentment among his fellow students," Professor Spencer said, "because of his innate modesty and respect for the opinions of others."

"While in school, Patterson felt that he was the beneficiary of a great privilege in being able to get an education," Spencer said. "Upon graduation he felt that he owed public service to the University and the state as a whole," he added.

Dr. Victor P. Morris, Dean of the School of Business, gave the invocation and the benediction.

The University Singers, a chorus of 70 student voices, under the direction of Max Risinger, assistant professor of music, sang two selections—"The Winged Souls," by Arthur Worell, and "Kryie Eleison," by Milton Dieterich.
