UNIVERSITY OF OREGON

Commencement 2011

MONDAY, JUNE 13, 2011

PRESIDENT'S LETTER

Welcome to the University of Oregon. Today is a threshold that separates years of study and what a loved one has accomplished from what that person has yet to accomplish. What lies ahead for these scholars is a universe of opportunity.

We are here to celebrate today's graduates and the individual effort that has gotten each of them to this day. We should also take a moment to celebrate the champions in their lives. We acknowledge the parents and peers, and their caring teachers from kindergarten through today who have encouraged, reassured, inspired and sometimes coaxed. Today marks a tremendous accomplishment for our graduates and everyone who helped propel them.

This is a milestone for our newest Duck alumni in more ways than one. The class of 2011 is the first to enjoy a phenomenal new link to campus—the Cheryl Ramberg Ford and Allyn Ford Alumni Center. The new alumni center has been called the front door to the UO, and a bridge between community and campus. I see it also as a reflection of the university as a whole: bold and innovative; a place of discovery; a welcoming environment for all who call themselves Ducks. During your time on campus today I invite you to enjoy and explore the university through its new alumni center.

A full day of activities is ahead for us all. The Ford Alumni Center and the rest of our campus are open to you, including our museums. Please enjoy the food, entertainment and other activities. This program can be your guide for the day, and we hope you will take full advantage of the opportunities it highlights.

Finally, to the class of 2011, I hope you reflect upon your experiences at this university, the places and situations in which you have been challenged, the knowledge and understanding you have developed, and the lasting friendships you have forged. Share this experience with your family and friends, and introduce them to those on campus who have made a profound difference in your lives.

Your University of Oregon education has opened the world to you. Explore it and enjoy. With this marvelous education, you are ready for commencement of the wonder that life will bring you.

Congratulations and best wishes.
