A question was asked that if the library only has one copy of a tape, would it be legal to make a copy. Randy responded that he would consider defending a state institution's right to make an archival copy for an item that may get damaged. However, the analysis changes if you are talking about Reserves – the trend in law is to support the right of the content provider. It is very important to be aware of license language and copyright law.

JQ added that making a copy of a video for a class may not fall under fair use. He will attend the next meeting to discuss this further and to give an overview of Blackboard.
