

REVIEWERS FOR VOLUME IV,
1991

The most important, and at times the most difficult decisions that an editor must make are the assignments of articles to skilled reviewers. No editor is sufficiently knowledgeable and widely-read that he or she can master the entire literature relevant to articles that are submitted to his or her journal. Reviewers attempt to determine the strengths and weaknesses of the manuscripts that they study, in order to help the authors improve their submissions and to advise the editor about the quality and of the manuscripts and their importance to the field of dissociation and the dissociative disorders. DISSOCIATION is fortunate to have been able to draw on the talents and energies of many gifted and wise clinicians and scholars. We acknowledge them with gratitude.
