New Homepage: Welcome

< The University of Oregon will unveil its new homepage at the start of fall term. Here's your chance to take an early look.

Welcome to a sneak peek at the University of Oregon's new homepage that will launch Sept. 26, the first day of fall term.

Much thought and effort has gone into this long-anticipated project and we now invite members of the university community to review and comment on the new site. We are still addressing some issues about how various elements of the pages appear in different browsers.

You may send your comments to the homepage task force through the Contact UO link found on the horizontal green banner at the top of the page.

Thanks for taking a few moments to examine the site and let us know what you think. Your suggestions are most welcome. The homepage taskforce will carefully examine your ideas and work to continually improve the university website and its homepage.

New Homepage: Strategy and Features

< The new homepage is designed to make it easier for external users—especially prospective students—to find what they're looking for.

The new homepage design was developed by a task force appointed by Senior Vice President and Provost John Moseley and is the first step in the university's new approach to the web.

The previous homepage design worked well as an information portal, particularly for internal audiences. However, in the past few years, the web has become a critical element for the university to communicate to a broad range of audiences, especially those outside the university who often get their first impression of Oregon from our website. With that in mind, the university is moving toward a more coordinated and strategic use of the web.

The new design is intended to be more inviting and accessible to external audiences, especially to prospective students, who are increasingly using the Internet as an information source when selecting a college. At the same time, it will still provide current students, as well as faculty and staff members, easy access to the web pages they use most often.

The design includes flash-based feature stories and images highlighting the university's particular strengths, as well as continually updated news and events items.

New features

The new homepage features links for particular audiences: prospective students, current students, faculty and staff members, parents and families, alumni, and visitors.

Scrolling over those group names, which are located right beneath a green banner across the top of the page, produces drop down menus with some of the key links for that group. For example, web e-mail, Blackboard, and DuckWeb appear in the drop down menus under both the Current Students and Faculty and Staff links. Clicking on a group name leads to index pages where members of those groups can find a full listing of links they are most likely to use.

The new homepage also includes important and often-used links in the left column.

In addition to the homepage and the user group index pages, the task force identified several new pages that needed to be created or existing pages that needed to be redone. New pages include About the UO, Campus Life, and Eugene and Local Area. A new Maps and Directions page will feature an interactive campus map that allows users to zoom in to specific areas, apply satellite imagery, and add or remove layers of information such as the locations of bus stops or emergency call boxes.

New Homepage: We Need Your Feedback

< Faculty and staff members will still find easy access to commonly used links with drop-down menus and index pages targeted to them.

The University of Oregon Homepage Task Force has made every effort to create an attractive and easy-to-use homepage that represents the university well. But the page will continue to evolve as users try it out and react.

Members of the university community are encouraged to explore the new site, give themselves a chance to get used to it, and then provide feedback through the Contact UO link found on the horizontal green banner. The task force requests your patience as its members examine and assimilate the expected high volume of responses. Changes and refinements will be implemented in a thoughtful, systematic, and cohesive way.

Task Force Background

The task force was formed late last winter by John Moseley, senior vice president and provost, who charged the group with updating the look of the top-level university web pages and making them easier for external users to navigate.

Led by Michael Redding, associate vice president for public and government affairs, and Deb Carver, UO librarian and former interim associate vice president for information services, the task force reviewed many other university websites, interviewed representatives of various user groups in February and March, met with focus groups about content in April and May, and conducted usability studies in August. The task force gathered as much information as possible given the ambitious time schedule of completing the pages by the start of fall term this year.

The design effort was led by Dave Ragsdale, a web specialist in the Computing Center, and Tim Jordan, a designer in Creative Publishing. Other members of the task force are Joe St Sauver, director of user services and network applications in the Computing Center; Kirstin Hierholzer, assistant director of the UO Libraries Center for Educational Technologies; Ed Dorsch, associate director of Development Communications; Todd Simmons, former director of Communications; and Guy Maynard, director of Creative Publishing.

The task force's recommendations have been implemented by a team including staff members from Public and Government Affairs, the University of Oregon Libraries Center for Educational Technology, Office of Admissions, and the Computing Center.

In keeping with the university's new strategic approach to the web, the homepage is being managed by a new web services unit within Public and Government Affairs.

Part of Creative Publishing, this new unit now has the primary responsibility for maintaining the homepage and other top-tier pages. Initially, this unit will focus on fine-tuning those pages. The unit also will be creating templates and guidelines to allow university departments to reflect the homepage design. Eventually, the web services unit hopes to offer consulting and design and development services to university departments, so Creative Publishing will provide one-stop service for both print and electronic designs.

Information Services at the Computing Center will continue to manage web security and all aspects of hardware and software related to the web, as well as to provide operational support for the top-tier university pages.

We are excited about the new face the University of Oregon presents to the world with our new website. We hope you will explore it and let us know what you think.

Gates, to be featured Oct. 11 in a new edition of the acclaimed PBS series "NOVA" entitled "Einstein's Big Idea," has played a leading role in unifying Einstein's general theory of relativity with the theory of relativistic quantum mechanics. He also was spotlighted in an earlier "NOVA" program, "The Elegant Universe."

Katrina Update, September 13, 2005

The University of Oregon is prepared to serve students from Gulf Coast areas affected by hurricane Katrina. While we can only begin to understand the difficulties faced by those in this devastated area, we offer our support and assistance to those whose education and lives have been disrupted.

We expect that most students will want to return to the institutions where they originally enrolled as soon as possible, and the procedures we have put into place are designed to with that in mind.

The Office of Admission (541) 346-3201 should be the point of initial contact for undergraduates interested in attending the University of Oregon fall term 2005.

To the extent possible, students will be accommodated through the regular university processes. The following is a guide to assistance at the UO.

ADMISSION:

Undergraduate and Graduate students from affected areas will be able to defer their application and matriculation fees. These fees will be collected only if the student continues their enrollment beyond fall 2005.

Undergraduate applicants unable to provide traditional documentation for admission will be considered using the documentation that is available.

Because each situation will be different, we strongly recommend that interested undergraduate students contact the Office of Admission directly at (541) 346-3201, or call 1-800-BEA-DUCK to get individual admission counseling. Students can also request admission assistance by sending an email request using the form available at <https://tembo.uoregon.edu/uoadmit/>

Graduate applicants should contact the Graduate School at (541) 346-5129.

TUITION/FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE:

Both undergraduate and graduate students whose education is interrupted by Hurricane Katrina will have their tuition charges remitted for fall term only if they have paid tuition to their home institution. Students will be asked to provide documentation if available, or to sign a statement that they have already paid tuition at their home institution, or that tuition has been paid on their behalf through a scholarship, federal, state or institutional financial aid grants or loans, or through other processes.

Students needing financial assistance should contact The University of Oregon Office of Financial Aid and Scholarships at (541) 346-3221.

HOUSING:

University Housing has a limited number of spaces available for both undergraduate and graduate students. Contact University Housing at (541) 346-4277 for information.

A number of individuals have offered their homes to students affected by Katrina. For more information contact the Office of Academic Advising at (541) 346-3211.

ADVISING:

Undergraduate Students: Academic advising is available to all new enrolling students during Week of Welcome. Specialized advising and coordination with academic programs will be made available to students who are near completion of a degree at their home school. The University of Oregon operates on the quarter system and will offer orientation and advising for new students during

Week of Welcome September 22-23. Classes begin on September 26, 2005.

Please contact the Office of Academic Advising at 346-3211 for advising and registration assistance. A special "advising check-in" meeting will be held only for admitted students who have had their education interrupted by Hurricane Katrina on Friday September 23rd at 10:00 am in 360 Oregon Hall.

Please contact the Office of Academic Advising at (541) 346-3211 for additional information or assistance.

Graduate Students: Individual departments and programs are the best source of advising for graduate students. The Graduate School ((541) 346-5219) will coordinate providing any further advising that students may need.

ACTIVE DUTY MILITARY:

Current students who are called up for active military duty to assist in the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina will be allowed to withdraw at any point in the term without academic penalty. The Office of Academic Advising ((541) 346-3211) will work with students on a case-by-case basis to determine the best course of action

COUNSELING AND SUPPORT:

New and continuing students who have been affected by Hurricane Katrina can seek personal support or counseling by calling the UO Counseling Center at (541) 346-3227.

The university continues work to help students, faculty displaced by Hurricane Katrina

- By Dave Frohnmayer

The hearts of all within the University of Oregon community go out to the victims of Hurricane Katrina. The university is working to assist students and faculty members who have been displaced by the hurricane's effects.

We are currently doing everything we can to admit these students on a provisional basis through the fall term. The university will work with students individually to address specific needs, including admission, academic and personal advising, course placement, computer and book access (the university's School of Law has arranged for loans of laptop computers to displaced students), and housing and financial aid. We are waiving tuition and fees for students who have paid tuition and fees to their home institutions. We have received inquiries from more than 70 undergraduate students and as of Sept. 12, have admitted 20 of those students to the university. Some 12 to 15 additional students have requested information from our law school and we know that at least one of those students intends to enroll at the law school. As well, queries have been received by some five graduate students and at least one is planning to attend the university.

With regard to faculty members, we are accepting requests for courtesy appointments and trying to accommodate the needs of these individuals as space permits. We also are pleased to announce that Lorry Lokey, CEO of Business Wire and University of Oregon Foundation trustee, has agreed to provide financial assistance to the university in order to support a number of displaced students. Mr. Lokey's support of the university has been tremendous and we are especially grateful for his offer to help these students.

In addition, the university is participating in the Sloan Consortium, which is working with the Southern Regional Education Board and the Sloan Foundation. The consortium is working on the Sloan Semester, a project that will bring free online courses to students displaced from hurricane-affected colleges and universities.

As well, the University of Oregon Bookstore and its satellite shops are collecting donations for the American Red Cross at each cash register location.

Explore your world on campus

At the University of Oregon, you can be part of student government, join a club, or start a club on your own. You'll participate in a sport or watch a game, attend an original performance or perform in one. At the Craft Center or in an art class, you can learn photography or how to blow glass. You'll meet people from all over the world, eat pad thai at the semiannual Street Fair, see a concert, or make a film. Political groups will teach you to advocate for others, support a cause, or make a difference in the world.

Guest Speaker

Sylvester James Gates Jr.

3:00 p.m. Sunday, September 25, 2005

McArthur Court • Free!

On the frontiers of particle physics, many terms start with "super," and NOVA producers call physicist Jim Gates one of their superstars. He's featured in a new NOVA special, "Einstein's Big Idea," this fall.

One of the most sought-after speakers on the planet for World Year of Physics 2005, Gates will speak on "Einstein's Lesson for the Third Millennium." University Convocation is the largest celebration of Einstein's "Miraculous Year" in the state of Oregon and a fitting tribute to the university's highly regarded Department of Physics.

Gates is renowned for his ability to make topics like Superstring/M-theory physics entertaining for everyone. See for yourself at University Convocation.
