THE UNIVERSITY OF OREGON

HISTORICAL

The University of Oregon was established by act of the state legislature October 19, 1872, and located at Eugene. Deady hall, the first University building, was erected by the citizens of Lane county, and presented to the Board of Regents in July, 1876. In September of the same year, the University opened its doors for the reception of students. The first class was graduated in June, 1878.

The equipment of the University was at first very small, and the courses of instruction were limited practically to literary lines. The University grew rapidly, and the demand for a broader curriculum was met. The law school, established in Portland in 1884 as a night school, was discontinued in 1905 when a regular three year law school was established at Eugene. The school of medicine was established in Portland in 1887. More recently the graduate school, 1900, and the schools of music, 1902, education, 1910, journalism, 1912, architecture, 1914, business administration, 1914, sociology, 1920, and physical education, 1921, have been added. The extension division, including the department of correspondence study, was established in 1907. This, with the summer sessions, makes the resources of the University available to those who are unable to attend the sessions of the regular academic year on the campus.

ORGANIZATION AND DEGREES

The University as a whole is subdivided into the following:

The Graduate School, the work in which leads to the degree of doctor of philosophy in the departments of education, geology, history, physics, psychology, and zoology; and to the degree of doctor of education, in all departments, at Eugene, and in the laboratory departments of the School of Medicine at Portland.

The College of Literature, Science and the Arts, with 22 undergraduate departments, the work of which leads to the degree of bachelor of arts and bachelor of science.

The School of Architecture and Allied Arts, the work of which leads to the bachelor of arts and bachelor of science, or in five and six year courses, to the degree of bachelor of architecture and of master of architecture.

The School of Business Administration, in which students proceed to the degree of bachelor of business administration, and subsequently, if desired to the degree of master of business administration.

The School of Education, whose students proceed to the conventional bachelor's degrees, or occasionally to the special degree of bachelor of science in education.

The School of Journalism, the graduates of which take the degree of bachelor of arts or bachelor of science in journalism.

The School of Law, which has a five-year curriculum leading to the degree of bachelor of laws, and a six-year curriculum leading first to the degree of bachelor of arts or bachelor of science, and proceeding to that of doctor of jurisprudence.

The School of Medicine, the seven-year curriculum of which leads first to the bachelor's degree, and then to that of doctor of medicine. It also offers work leading to the master's degree.

The School of Music, in which those who proceed to degrees take the bachelor of arts, bachelor of science, or bachelor of music, according to course chosen.

The School of Physical Education, whose students proceed to the bachelor's degrees.

The School of Sociology, which contains also the Portland school of social work, and through which the bachelor's degrees are obtainable.

The Extension Division, containing the departments of visual instruction and correspondence study, the lecture bureau, and the various extension courses throughout the state, including the numerous ones of the Portland Extension center.

The Summer Sessions, two simultaneous sessions of six weeks each, given in Eugene and Portland, work in which may usually be applied toward the bachelor's and master's degrees.
