THE 1912
OREGANA
A RECORD OF
THE UNIVERSITY YEAR
1910 - 1911

PUBLISHED BY THE JUNIOR CLASS
AT THE UNIVERSITY OF OREGON
IN THE YEAR 1911

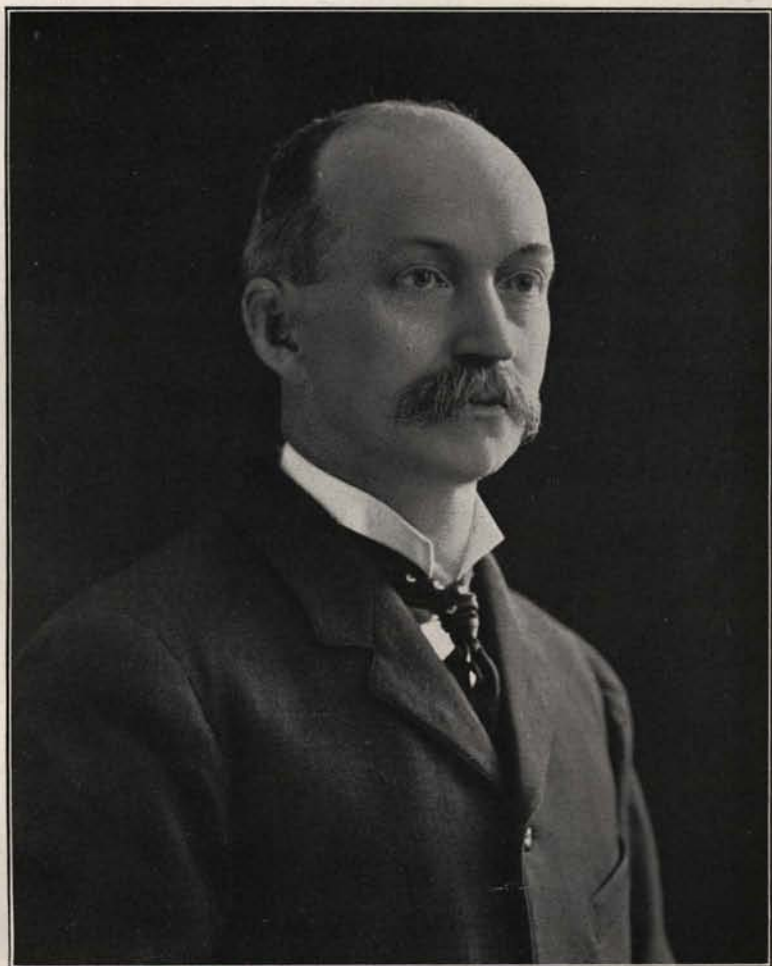

President Prince L. Campbell

Dedication

TO

Judge Robert S. Bean, President of our Board of Regents, as a mark of appreciation of his faithful interest,
his patient service and his undying loyalty,
this third volume of the Oregonana is most respectfully dedicated.

Judge Robert S. Bean

Foreword

IN preparing this volume it has been our hope and purpose to present a faithful Memorabilia of the current college year in as attractive a form as possible. We have endeavored to perpetuate in graphic fashion the distinctive events and features of student life at Oregon. And so if, in any measure, these pages reflect the spirit which has prompted the records herein registered, or if they serve to inspire an added loyalty and interest in Oregon University, our efforts shall have been made to good purpose.

Perhaps in shaping this book we have followed too closely the well trodden course of former editors. Let it answer as a simple acknowledgement of certain rules and precedents which the very nature of our work has compelled us to follow.

MISS CAMILLA LEACH

Has anyone, studious or otherwise, attended the University during the last decade who has not learned to know and revere Miss Camilla Leach, our reference librarian,—so familiarly referred to as "Aunt Psyche (Pidgy)"? We believe not.

Miss Leach might properly be called the Mother of Our Library, for she has been its guiding spirit almost since inception. She began her duties in 1897 at a little table over in the men's dormitory and today her proud smile still radiates from behind the more dignified desk in the center of Johnson Hall.

All of us have been visited by her kindly interest,—the serious have been led to that exact niche where Volume X lies; the frivolous (and everyone knows that some of us often go to the library on missions quite foreign to study),—we have been ushered into her acquaintance by the sharp tap of her pencil or by the censure of her warning nod.

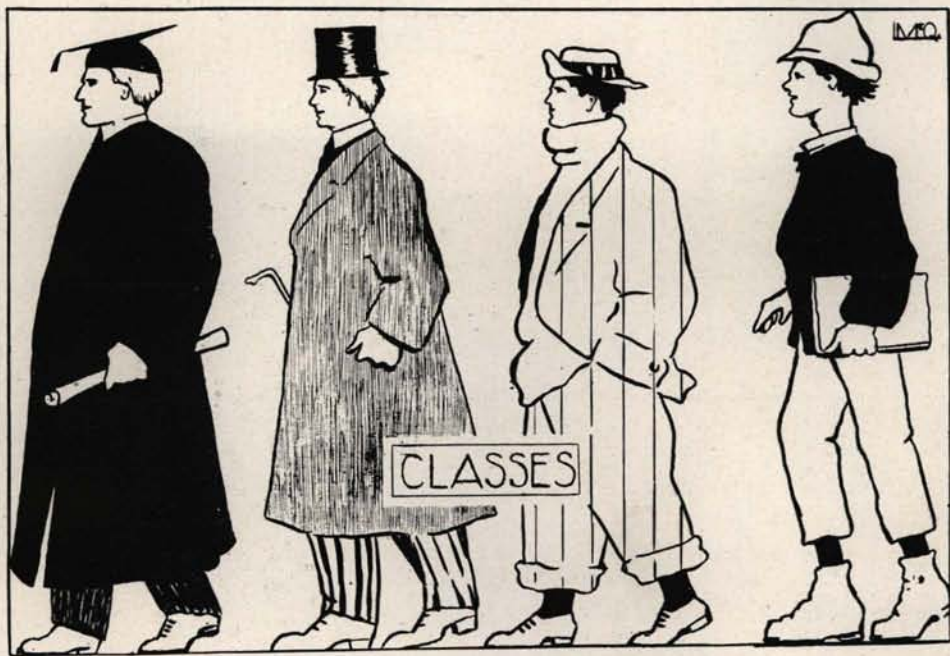

But however that may be, each of us, as we step out into the world, is to carry a pleasant recollection of Miss Camilla Leach.

Senior History

The Class of 1911 believes itself to be the most brilliant aggregation of mortals that ever favored the University of Oregon with four years of its precious time. It does not wish to appear boastful or egotistical and it would rather not be accused of having carried swelling head-pieces, but, nevertheless, to grab a curbstone parlance, it claims to be the pure Havana filler with wrapper and gold band thrown in.

Of course other senior classes have laid claim to the same distinction. They, however, may have been backed by a fertile imagination,—we are sustained by achievements. List while we unfold the history of our greatness.

Our short stay has marked an epoch in the life of the University. We have lived through the days of reformation and seen the glory of the rare old golden days pass by. We have seen the last of hazing and the entrance of the era of brotherly love. We were the last to enjoy the unrestricted privilege of hurling the neophytes into the icy waters of the mill race, and we were the first seniors who ever tried to make freshmen respect our dignity through the salve of soft words and honeyed smiles, instead of violence and fear.

In our youth we were athletes. Many were the track meets and football games we won. In football we are still the undisputed class champions of the University. As freshmen we defeated the sophomores, and as sophomores we defeated the freshmen. Every succeeding freshmen class has been defeated, consequently we are the football champions. What does it matter if we have been defeated in every other form of athletics for the last three years? These two victories filled our cup so full of athletic glory that if we crowded any more into it, it would slop over.

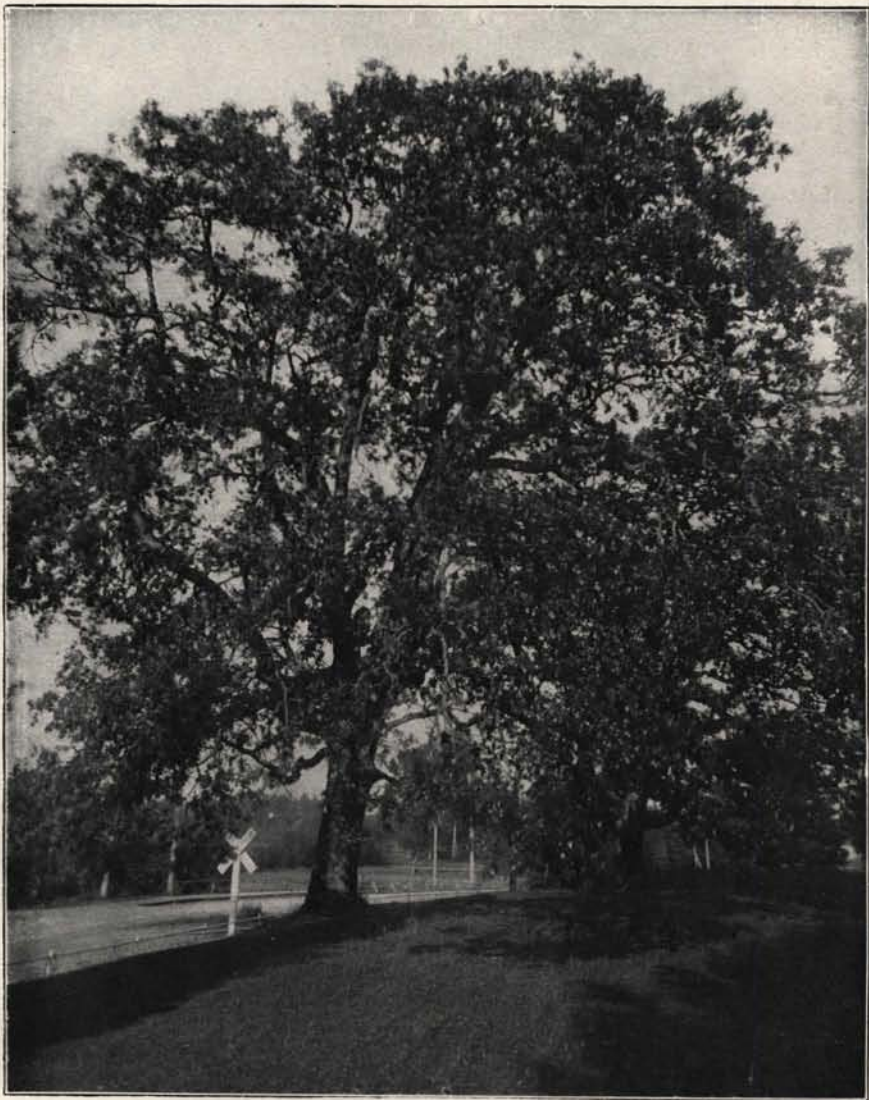

Also, we gave a screamingly successful freshmen dance. It might not have been more enjoyable than other dances of its kind, but we do claim that we went further in debt and that it took us longer to get out than it ever did any other class. The financiers of our class then learned that we would not pay class debts so they made our class activities self-supporting. We call to witness this statement our Oregana. The best, the liveliest and the most up-to-date Oregana ever published, yet it cost us not one cent. In this most marvelous and unprecedented achievement we built the lighthouse of financial success. Other classes have but to steer towards our beacon if they would avoid the shoals of bankruptcy.

We are spending the last days in the organization of a stupendous brain trust. We do not expect to take all the learning away from our Alma Mater, but we do expect to get most of it. Many years must pass before another class can hope to get as much as we have, for we have not only stripped the fruit from the tree of knowledge but we are taking most of the tree.

Now that we are about to fold our black gowns about us and silently steal away, grieve not, for if ever aught goes wrong with dear old U. of O. we shall gladly leave off running the world long enough to come back and set things aright.

In the full flush of manhood stricken low:
The doom impending seen—but seen too late.
A moment's fruitless struggle. Grim and slow
Rolled on the silent Juggernaut of Fate.
Crushed was the magic ring that life had drawn.
And death had trampled out the vital flame:
Forth from this earthen temple he had gone.

Into the visional somewhere, whence he came,
Toward that mighty void impending vast,
And silent o'er zone of ceaseless strife,
We breathe a tribute to the spirit passed
Into the lotus land of rest from life,
Then where the drowsing crowns of lotus bend,
Soft be thy sleep, and dreamless, my friend.

The School of Law

At the beginning of the current year, the members of the University of Oregon Law Department perfected an associated student body, similar to the one at Eugene. Formerly, all student affairs had been conducted by a committee of three, one representative being chosen from each class. Thus, the activity of the student body had been limited at the option of this committee.

But times have changed and now a new era has dawned for the Law School. At each meeting of the embryo lawyers, the true-blooded "Disciples of Blackstone" cluster around the bowl, fill their pipes and enjoy a good time, —incidentally dispatching the voluminous student body business in a manner that would bring credit to any dignified bar association.

At present, debate occupies the center of the stage and the prospects for capturing forensic honors are quite favorable. Since the inception of intercollegiate law school debate in the Northwest, three years ago, the Oregon School has won twice.

This year it is to be represented by two of its best teams,—one to meet the Methodists, at Salem; the other to compete in the "Paterson International Debating League," which includes the Law Schools of Vancouver and Victoria, B. C., and the Law Departments of the Universities of Oregon and Washington.

Even with the bar examinations confronting the senior class and the final "X's" ahead of the other classes, the last lap of the 1910-1911 school year finds the Oregon Law Department flourishing in all its branches.

In passing, it is interesting to note that among the one hundred and eighty-five students registered in law at Portland, there are many who have, in times past, attended the "U" at Eugene.

The Debating Staff

Above, Clarence M. Eubanks, Manager of Debate; E. H. Whitney and B. F. Wagner of the team to compete in the "Paterson International Debating League." Below, C. Francis Hogan, A. E. McKenzie and Ira W. Carl of the team to meet Willamette University.

The School of Medicine

The Medical Department of the University of Oregon is located at the corner of Twenty-third and Lovejoy Streets, Portland, convenient to the Good Samaritan and St. Vincent Hospitals. This coincidence serves as a distinct advantage since all Oregon Medics are allowed to assist in operations and are given certain precedence when the graduate internes are appointed at each hospital.

Clinics are also conducted regularly at the Multnomah County Hospital where a diversity of cases is met with.

The Out Patient Clinic, now removed to the business district, has been of great value to the department. During the year, over 3000 medical and surgical cases have been given free treatment by students under direct faculty supervision.

The Oregon Medical School is now rated as "Class A" in the American Association of Medical Colleges and by use of the recent legislative appropriation a still further improvement in the faculty and laboratory equipment is contemplated. Two professors have already been added,—one in the Department of Anatomy and another in the Department of Physiology.

The Medic Student Body now numbers less than one hundred, due to the recent increase made in the entrance requirements.

Plans are being formulated for the organization of an Alumni Association which, it is believed, will materially extend the influence of the institution.

Forensics — A Tribute and Resume

Within the short space of two years, no man has ever done more for debate and oratory, at Oregon, than our present debating coach,—Instructor Gustave W. Buchen. Fresh from his laurels achieved in debate and student affairs at the University of Wisconsin, Mr. Buchen came to Oregon University when forensics were at their lowest ebb. The year prior to his arrival we lost every contest in debate and oratory. But the Badger man did not lose heart. He immediately “got busy” and he has been working steadily and faithfully ever since. His unique courses in extempore and public speech and in parliamentary law have been among the most practical in the entire University curriculum. And it was there that our prize orators and debaters gained their powers of analysis and their winning stage presence.

When a coach can outline both sides of a question and drill his men to win consistently on negative and affirmative alike, the value of debate instruction is clearly demonstrated.

In arguing the Federal Charter question last year, our affirmative team won from the University of Washington and our negative team outpointed both Utah and Idaho. Orator Rounds lost the State Oratorical contest by a fraction of a point and our first co-ed team, supporting the negative of the Postal Savings Bank issue, dropped a 2 to 1 decision to Washington.

Thus far this year Oregon's representatives have been winners in every contest,—Spencer won the State Oratorical; and our affirmative and negative teams out-talked Washington and Stanford, respectively, in arguing the Ship Subsidy question. We have yet to meet Utah in inter-collegiate debate. Washington in co-ed debate, and Robison has yet to orate in the inter-state contest.

From this brief resume it may be seen that Oregon's standing in forensics is higher than it has been since the days of Coach Brindley, when, (1907), Veatch and Galloway won the championship of the eight western states.

The Funeral of the Philo's

'Twas a dreary evening late in 1910, when a small group of sorrowing brothers gathered around the bier of the Philologistian Literary Society to take a farewell look at their departed friend.

Hark! There is music in the air,—soft, slow and melodious. Whence such tones? As sweet, they are, as those of the Dormitory Conservatory; as refreshing, even, as those of the "Hungry Seven" German Band. Ah! a quartet of Philo's is sounding forth,—Struck, McCoy, Marshall and Shantin are singing. Listen and you will catch the words: "To heaven, to heaven with Philologistian."

Finally, as the sweet strains slowly died away, J. D. Collins arose. Stretching forth to the full buoyancy of his great height, with a bursting heart and in rich bass voice, he supplicated Philo that the departed spirit might be guided safely over the River Styx to those green pastures where dwell the Midnight Doughnut, the Free Religion Society, the typhoid scare and Professor Howe's Lecture on Coeducation. (His prayer is printed in full in a large leather volume published at his own expense and entitled, "My Poems and Other Yarns, which will never be mentioned elsewhere.")

After the "Amens" had been heaped upon J. D., Charles Webster Robison, in his soft southern accent, delivered the funeral oration on the theme;

"Its life was but an empty dream,
Its death a sleep and a forgetting."

And never was "Beauty" more eloquent. His sad tones and sympathetic words brought tears to every eye. It was indeed a solemn occasion.

Then the familiar figures of the pall bearers stepped forward,—Dobie, Geisler, Onthank and Himes, followed by the honorary bearers,—Nicholas, Rounds, Powers and Earl Marshall. And as they bore the casket from the hall, the quartet chanted the engraved inscription:

"Stop here, dear Laurean, and cast an eye,
As you are now, so once was I,
As I am now, so you must be,
Prepare for death and follow me."

(Since then, a sneering Laurean has added these chiselled words:

"To follow you we're not content
Until we know which way you went.")

Was This a Flaunt?

Review of 1910 Gridiron Season

Main, 1911 Captain

Oregon University's unfortunate football schedule was a determining factor in its loss of the 1910 Northwest Collegiate Championship. Its win over the Oregon Agricultural College clearly entitled it to the undisputed title for the State of Oregon, but the lack of a game with the University of Washington gave Dobie's men the Northwest title on the basis of comparative scores.

It was not the fault of the coaching staff that our men lost that mysterious Multnomah game, Thanksgiving Day. They were not in fighting shape, to begin with, and when the tide turned against them on that fluke fumble-touchdown early in the game, their regrettable over-confidence developed into a more regrettable nervousness which rendered team play absolutely out of question.

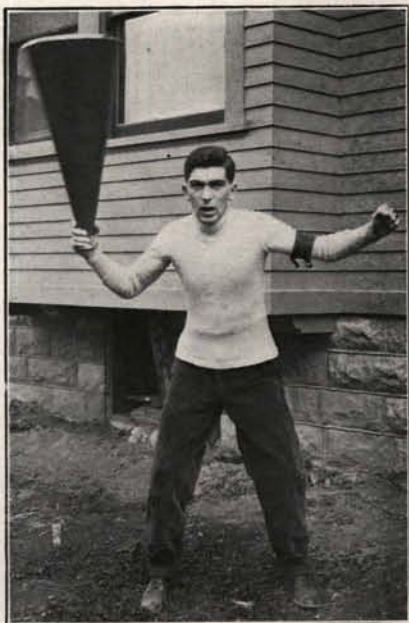

When Head Coach "Buffalo Bill" Warner arrived in September to take charge of football, the outlook was indeed gloomy. Nine members of the 1909 eleven were missing and most of the promising new men were short on experience. But Warner soon proved himself to be one of the most resourceful generals ever seen here and every squad man immediately dipped in with the same "get there" spirit. They knew that he had the "Dope" and his strenuous practices taught them that he meant business.

The season-opener, with the Alumni,—Varsity 16, Alumni 6,—was slow and loosely-played, proving a disappointment to all.

But the next week our hopes soared high. Coach Sweetland crawled in the hole with his Willamette team and Watson was forced to hook a twelfth hour match with Puget Sound University, which had succumbed to Washington, 50 to 0, the Saturday previous. In this contest Warner's "Scoring Machine" rolled up a grand total of 114 points,—the second largest score recorded anywhere last year. Captain Taylor himself annexed 67 of these points,—another near-record.

October 29, the squad hiked to Moscow to meet Idaho which had already shown metal by walloping Washington State. Our men played the scrappiest game of the season, winning 29 to 0.

Robison, Head Cheer Leader

Then came that Day of all Days,—November 12, at Corvallis. The Hay-Miners put up a hard, clean game but the Varsity won without much effort, 12 to 0, on two field goals and a touch-down. Our men did not play their game, due, perhaps to the spirited rooting which often confused the signals.

Then came the slump just prior to the Multnomah game. The climax of the season had been passed successfully and the team sluffed interest, always laboring under the delusion that the Club would be easy "pickings." How our year's record was so curiously blotted has been told elsewhere. Latourette's absence, due to injury, may have had something to do with our defeat. All the men played well individually but were "not there" as a team, somehow. Michael and Bailey played a rattling good game, while Dud Clarke, Oregon '10, shone for the Club. All honor is due Multnomah, for it put forth its most formidable team in years.

"Chuck" Taylor, during the past season, proved himself to be one of the greatest players the West has ever seen. This was recognized by Walter Camp in his annual football review. Taylor was the only man west of the Mississippi to receive honorable mention for Camp's imaginary All-American.

The second team men again exemplified "Oregon Spirit" by working faithfully to the end with only bruises and "flunks" as reward.

Head Coach Warner and Assistant "Sandy" Hunt have been signed again for next year and with every 1910 man back in the moleskins our slogan next year is to be "Washington."

TRACK

Track Review and Prophecy

Hawkins, 1911 Captain

At the beginning of the 1910 track season we were severely handicapped by a lack of finished material which accounted for our early season defeat at Seattle. Later, as the new men developed, our team regained its championship form.

For the fourth consecutive year our men managed to pull the banner at the Columbia Indoor Meet with a registry of 36 points to O. A. C.'s 25.

At the Triangular meet in Seattle, however, Hayward's squad suffered defeat for the first time since the inception of the triumvirate. The slow development of our new men and the ill effects of a late Spring were instrumental in this overthrow. Washington took first with 78 points, Oregon second with 39 and Idaho third with 23.

The next week, May 14, "Bill" sent a team of six men to the Coast Conference Meet, held at Berkeley Oval. Here, against heavy competition, Oregon grabbed third place.

Immediately after this meet our new men began to find themselves. As a result, we easily out-pointed both O. A. C. and W. S. C. Our 84 to 38 triumph over the Corvallis contingent came during Junior Week End and the very next week we slipped the crack Pullman team the slim end of a 81-59 score.

Thus, though we lost the big triangular event, we may regard 1910 as a successful season. A wealth of new material was developed and several college records bettered.

McGuire established a new coast record, 10:05, for the two mile event. Neill, a freshman, set the coast mark in the javelin throw at 148 ft. 6 in., reputed as the best throw made in the entire country last season. Hawkins tied the coast record of 15-2 in the high hurdles. Our relay team,—Johns, McDaniel, Kay and Elliott,—established 3:27-2 as the coast record for the mile relay.

And aside from these coast records, several college records were shattered. Williams vaulted 12 ft. 2 in.—college and Northwest mark. Freshman McClure ran the mile in 4:34-4; and Johns tied Payne's record of 51-1 in the quarter mile.

Now a word of prophecy. Every one of these record-smashers, except ex-Captain Williams, is in college again this year. The freshmen squad contributes a promising outlay, among whom several should evolve into point winners. If these men will work with the time-honored spirit, there is no evident reason why Oregon Varsity should not regain the coveted title of Northwest Championship.

Our recent victory at the Columbia Indoor Meet is quite encouraging, for it was accomplished without a complete entry of weight events,—our stronghold. And so, barring the treacherous Unforseen, we are warranted in expecting our men to pack home additional trophies.

M. W. Hawkins

Trainer Hayward

No man has ever rejoiced more at our victories or suffered more at our defeats than William L. Hayward, whose service to the University of Oregon is widely recognized and whose name is bound to leave an indelible impress upon its athletic history. "Bill" is for "Oregon" first, last and every minute of the time and he is one of those few people who can pull off something big when things are least expected.

To a person not well acquainted with Hayward, his aspect seems stern and forbidding. But after one has penetrated the veil of mere acquaintanceship, he finds in Bill a faithful friend and comrade.

In after life, as recollections of our college days grow dim, surely there will remain a vivid recollection of our daily association with William Hayward.

BASE BALL

Baseball Review and Prospectus

Annexing four straight conference games at the start of the season, Oregon's 1910 varsity baseball team gave great promise of landing the Northwest Championship. "Father Tom" Kelly had a scrappy bunch of men to work with, under the captaincy of Dud Clark, and all the "Dope" pointed our way.

But the Inland Empire trip proved to be the beginning of the end. Our men dropped games to Pullman, Wash., Whitman and Idaho and the sudden slump lingered until after they had slipped three out of the series of four games to the Agricultural College. And thus, by splitting even with Washington here at home, we surrendered the championship to O. A. C., with Washington second and Oregon third.

The team played ragged ball in spots but displayed the best of fighting spirit throughout the entire season. Most of our defeats were by narrow margins. Injuries and sicknesses contributed as accompanying misfortunes which combined to serve as a persistent streak of hoodoo. But why try to salve things over with a line of excuses? Washington and the Aggies simply had the jinks on us when it came to measure up and they did it without treachery or intrigue.

This Spring, all the old timers are back with the exceptions of ex-Captain Clark, Ferd Henkle, who has landed a permanent berth with Magnate Dugdale, of the Seattle leaguers, and "Mike" Gabrielson, who forsook college for the insurance business.

A Syracuse star, Paul J. Lynch, has been secured to whip the men into shape and announces that he is well pleased with the general outlook.

The mild weather has put a heap of ginger into the boys and our prospects at present writing are indeed encouraging.

The new men who give particular promise are Peet and Houck in the pitcher's box; Fenton at second; Anunsen at short; Roberts at third; and Cobb, utility.

The success of our 1911 season depends upon the development of a formidable pitching staff. The rest of the field looks equal to most any sort of music and the stickers are meeting the ball in fine shape.

The 1910 Basket Ball Season

Oregon University may well be proud of its record during the 1910 basketball season. Although not winning the Northwest Championship, Oregon had an unusually strong team and was a stubborn contender for honors throughout an exciting race, finishing second in the percentage column. The Varsity five defeated every conference college at least once. Out of 12 games played Oregon won 9,—losing only to the University of Washington.

Opening the season with five old men,—Walker, Elliott, Moore, Watson and Jamison,—we gathered considerable strength from the incoming class which was taking an active interest in the inter-fraternity and inter-class games; while Fenton, the famous Dallas player, and Sims, a Minnesota man, were already finished players.

After putting the screws to Pacific University, 63-7, we dropped a 36-16 match to the fast Portage, Wis., militia quintet. Then came that successful Inland Empire trip on which the Varsity won all of its games. These scores were: Whitman College 15 and 12, Oregon 31 and 36; University of Idaho 10 and 16, Oregon 27 and 21; Washington State College 19, Oregon 32; and a second game at Pullman was forfeited to Oregon.

Soon after their return from this trip Oregon split even with Washington,—Washington 13 and 22; Oregon 27 and 19. Later the Varsity won two easy games from Pullman on the local floor,—44 to 15 and 32 to 7.

On March 3, Oregon journeyed to Seattle to settle the Northwest Championship with Washington. Handicapped by a slick and strange floor and a seemingly slicker and stranger referee, Hayward's men lost both games. The first game went, 22-18, and the deciding game was Washington's by a single point,—made on a foul after the final whistle had blown. Our men led in both these contests at the end of the half.

Basketball is at the University to stay, and, since the team of this year has been the best in our history, we may expect an added interest in later years. Oregon this year had three representatives on the All-Northwest team,—a larger number than any other conference college.

Fenton, at center, was absolutely without a peer in this section. Elliott, our scrappy guard, and Captain Jamison were each chosen on several of the all-star selections along with Fenton. Sims, at the other guard, is a real crackerjack and Walker, at forward, played the floor and passed in fine style.

During the season Oregon scored 304 points to its opponents 169. Twenty-two was the highest score recorded against us in any game.

Since none of our men leave, our prospects for next Fall are flattering.

Homar Jamison

1910 Varsity Squad

The Freshmen Team

Reading from left to right,—Motschenbacher, reserve forward; Meek, reserve guard; Vierick, guard; Roberts, forward and captain; Bradshaw, center; Rice, guard; Brooks, forward; and Huggins, manager

These men were undefeated in their class and played some nip-and-tuck practice matches with the Varsity squad. This is their record,—Eugene High 15, 1914 Freshmen 46; Washington High, of Portland, 12, 1914 Freshmen 26; and Eugene High 3, 1914 Freshmen 51.

Tennis Review

While the collegiate tennis championship for 1910 did not rest with the Lemon Yellow, the season as a whole was the most successful in the history of the game at Oregon.

Previous to last year, a tennis court at the University was at best a transient affair. In '08 the Muckers' Tennis Club flourished, holding practice and tournament matches on a court located in front of the dormitory. "Cap" Briggs, however, with an eye to the extension of his absolute monarchy, converted this court into a lawn. At the beginning of the season of 1909 the Kappa Sigma Fraternity came to the rescue by building a court on the site of their present home, and throwing it open to Varsity practice. The Dormitory Club, later in the year, in a burst of enthusiasm, erected some back stops enclosing a more or less undulating and hilly stretch of ground.

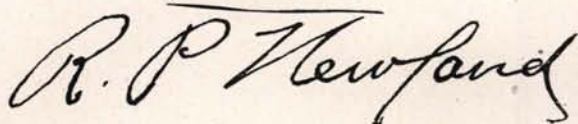

As yet, however, the University had no courts of its own. Later in the spring, the women of the University presented to the Board of Regents about one hundred and fifty dollars worth of argument, for which they received the three courts now in use. Some of the 'Varsity players were filled with hope at this news, but the placard "Trespassers Beware" left them still seeking charity. At the beginning of last season, however, all previous neglect of the deserving was made good, for the Student body financed the construction of a concrete court and made consistent practice possible for the team.

After an exhaustive tryout, the following first five players were chosen for the Varsity squad:—Harry Stine '12, Ralph Newland '12, Paul Bond '09, Howard Gray '12, and Gerald Eastham '11. The team was chosen after a round robin and Stine and Newland were selected to make the trip to Seattle to represent Oregon in The Northwest Conference Tournament. O.A.C., W.S.C., Idaho, and Whitman failed to show up and the tournament was played as a five match dual meet. Washington was winner, taking three of the five matches.

An unusual interest in tennis was awakened last year by the handicap tournament for the possession of the Larraway Trophy. Forty-nine hopeful racket wielders entered this event which was finally won by C. P. Shangle '10, who played up from the fifth class. Another tournament instituted this year is the one for the championship of the freshmen class and the possession of the Watts Jewelry Cup.

Oregon is handicapped by the lack of players who really know the game. At present there are only three or four men in the University who can actually play the game of tennis. These become so familiar with the style of play used by the others that they fail to improve as they should. The few who are really able to play the game are gradually sinking to the level of their understudies, while the novices are gradually approaching a degree of skill which they cannot hope to exceed unless new and better players come to Eugene. The only cure for this condition of affairs is for Oregon to promote the game in the high schools of the State.

The game should be controlled by the Athletic Council who might insist on regular practice and training the same as in the other recognized sports.

Women's Tennis

The officers of the Women's Tennis Club are as follows:

Miss Mildred Bagley, '12; president; Miss Maud Beals, '12, secretary; Miss Helen Beach, '11, vice-president; and Miss Jean Allison, '12, treasurer. Tournaments are held each spring and a prize cup is awarded to the winner. Last year Miss Mary Perkins, a faculty member, (extreme right on above cut), won this trophy.

The Board of Regents of the University have provided three courts for the exclusive use of the women, and a general interest is being developed in the sport.

The Genesis of the University of Oregon

(Feeling that our early history has been somewhat overlooked, the editor is glad to give full space in lending perpetuity to these interesting original papers,—printed here for the first time.)

At the close of our public school year in the summer of 1872, Mr. John C. Arnold, principal, informed the Board of Directors that the best and brightest scholars were about to pass the highest grade then taught in our school, and that they would be compelled to go abroad to continue their education.

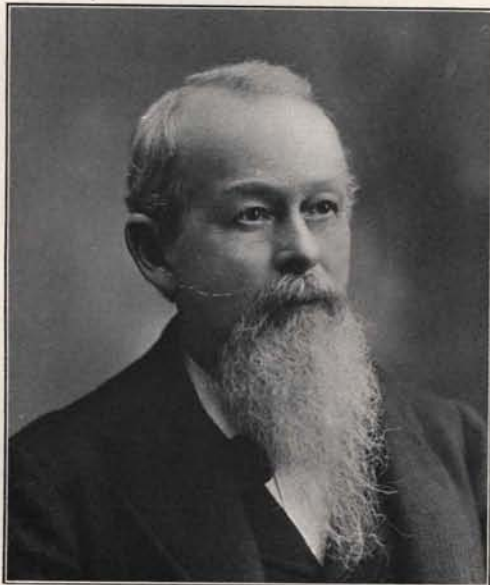

This fact emphasized the great need for higher grades in our school and the directors began at once to seriously agitate the question of a High School for Eugene.

At that time the erection of a building, such as was contemplated, meant no small undertaking. Mr. Arnold informed us that the Legislature had made an appropriation to aid Baker City (I think), in the construction of their high school, and we concluded to apply for similar aid.

About September 10, 1872, the school directors, W. J. J. Scott, chairman, S. S. Spencer, and B. F. Dorris, invited County Judge John M. Thompson, J. J. Walton Jr., Principal Arnold and his assistant, T. M. Martin, to meet with them at the school house (then located upon the site now occupied by the Central School building), to decide upon the course of procedure in obtaining this suggested state aid.

After a few minutes informal conversation, Judge Thompson remarked that there was possibly something in store for us, of infinitely greater importance to Eugene than a high school; that next month the Legislature would locate the State University somewhere, and he suggested that Eugene apply for the location. So the project of a high school was at once abandoned, and it was agreed to call a meeting for the next evening to which all interested persons were to be invited.

This meeting was largely attended. W. J. J. Scott was chosen chairman, and J. J. Walton, secretary. It was decided to incorporate under the name "Union University Association," and to prepare a bill asking for the location of the University. Hon. John M. Thompson, J. J. Walton, and J. B. Underwood were appointed to draft "Articles of Incorporation," and our legislative bill. Having learned that there were already four applicants in the field, and that the support of the Senators and the Representatives was being solicited, it was ordered that a circular letter be prepared and mailed to all Legislators, asking them to hold themselves uncommitted to any locality, that they might be free to consider the several bills that were to come before them, asking for the location of the State University, and to support the bill most favorable to the best interest of the state. B. F. Dorris was appointed to attend to this matter, and, inside of forty-eight hours, this letter was printed and mailed as directed.

September 16, 1872, the committee reported their draft of our bill and "Articles of Incorporation," with J. M. Thompson, J. J. Walton Jr., W. J. J. Scott, B. F. Dorris, J. G. Gray, J. B. Underwood, J. J. Comstock, A. S. Patterson, S. S. Spencer, E. L. Bristow, E. L. Applegate and A. W. Patterson as incorporators. Both reports were adopted, the secretary requested to file the Articles of Incorporation with the Secretary of State (which was done September 19, 1872), and the incorporators were appointed to attend the session of the Legislature to secure, if possible, the passage of our bill. Five towns competed for the prize, Monmouth, Salem, Forest Grove, Albany and Eugene. The contest, though spirited, was honorable throughout; and Eugene won.

The non-sectarian feature in Section 4 of our bill gave us a decided advantage which our friends pressed from the very start. I think it was the principal factor upon which Eugene won out.

Bidding good-bye to their friends and competitors alike, the Eugene members of the Third House came home to find the town still rejoicing over our good fortune.

Flushed with victory, the "Union University Association," now effected permanent organization by electing Hon. John M. Thompson, president, J. J. Walton Jr., secretary and Thomas G. Hendricks treasurer. The five directors (as I now remember them), were W. J. J. Scott, S. S. Spencer, J. B. Underwood, W. H. Abrams and B. F. Dorris.

A large committee was appointed to solicit subscriptions, for, by the terms of our Bill, we were pledged to deed to the state, by January 1, 1874, free from encumbrance, a completed building and grounds to the value of $50,000. Our failure to comply was to void the location.

An act had passed the Legislature authorizing the county to subscribe $30,000. Accordingly, the county court subscribed that sum, and it was not long until our list footed $40,000.

By this time W. W. Piper, a Portland architect, had submitted the front and side elevations of what is now Deady Hall.

Well pleased with the drawings, which the state board also approved, we adopted Mr. Piper's plans, and he soon completed the details. We let the contract for brick to M. W. McMurray, who expected to begin to deliver them early in the Spring.

The contract for brick and stone work was let to Alexander & Barker, Portland contractors. The wood work was let to Douglass and VanAlstine, and the tin roofing to B. F. Dorris. Contracts let amounted to $32,000, or very close to that sum. Work on the building was progressing very satisfactorily and the brick work was nearly completed, when the discontent and opposition of the then wealthy men of the county to the $30,000 appropriation became stronger. Finally a number of them went before the county court to urge the reconsideration of the court's action in appropriating $30,000 to the University fund. Their protest was so strenuous that the court finally rescinded the appropriation order.

This was a staggering blow,—the hardest the enterprise had yet received. Right here the optimistic spirit of J. J. Walton was shown, his characteristic expression being, "By the wars we will succeed without the aid of the large tax-payers; we will appeal to the Patrons of Husbandry, the farmers of the County to help us, and they will do it." Up to this time our canvas for funds had been confined mostly to the town.

The Directors called the contractors together to explain the full situation and to outline plans for the future. This memorable meeting was held on the bricklayers' scaffold on the southwest corner of Deady.

It was agreed to continue operations and to rush the roof and tin work in order to secure the building from the damage of winter rains. This was done in good time.

Meanwhile, we had not been idle. Our appeal for aid to the several organized Granges in the county was meeting with liberal response. The school children were even asked to contribute, and I believe they subscribed over $1000.

It being apparent that we could not finish the building within the time required by our Act of Location, and that we would have to get an extension of time from the Legislature, we were greatly hampered in our canvas for funds, since many preferred to withhold their aid until the extension of time was obtained. We continued to canvas, but it was slow work.

We had a photograph taken of the building as it stood,—scaffolding standing and all openings securely closed. This photograph and the architect's original drawings we took to Salem when the Legislature met, obtaining permission from the Secretary of State to hang them in his office. I think, I can safely say that within one week every Legislator had examined the plans and photograph, and heard the explanation of our failure to complete the building within the stipulated time; that it was due to no fault or mismanagement on our part, but rather to the withdrawal of the $30,000 appropriation by our county court. Our statement was generally accepted by the members of both Houses. Requiring no argument on either floor, our request for further time was granted by both Houses and the Governor signed the bill.

So with lighter hearts and fresh courage, we again took up our self-imposed task. Work on the building was at once resumed, and the canvas for funds pressed with vigor. Some added largely to their former subscriptions.

Many farmers willing to help us, but having no money to give, turned over farm products, so that we soon had eggs, chickens, vegetables, hogs, sheep, beef cattle, horses and grain in great abundance. Right here the wisdom of choosing Tom Hendricks as treasurer was conspicuously shown. At that time our community was quite small, and it required but a small supply of any farm product to glut the market. But they could never overstock Tom,—he always managed, somehow, to convert everything into money.

We were now entering upon our fourth and last year. Oh, how tired we were getting! Like a worn out man on the mountain top, in a freezing, pitiless storm, when nature pleads for sleep and rest, but the inner man says, "No, to sleep now means death, I must keep moving." So it was with us; to cease or slacken our efforts then, the goal not yet in sight, meant the loss of all. We could not bear thought of that, so with anxious but hopeful hearts we labored on.

In June 1876, the building nearly completed, and sufficient subscriptions pledged to pay all contracts, we notified the State Board to come to Eugene to inspect the property and accept it if, in their opinion, we had complied with the terms required by the Act of Location. In July the Governor and State Treasurer came and, after a critical inspection of the building and grounds, readily accepted the property, after receiving the assurance that we would immediately proceed to pay all claims against it.

The percentage of loss from our failure to collect subscriptions was much larger than we had expected, and this was discouraging, but it only inspired us to increased effort.

Our straightened circumstances were known to all, but they excited very little interest among those most able to help us. Finally, Charlie Fitch was told by Mr. W. S. to have a carriage ready the next morning, for Uncle U. H., G. H. and himself were going out to see Uncle C. C. to get him, if possible, to go in with them and pay off the debt. This was most cheering news to us all.

Bright and early the next morning, Fitch and our three friends started out on their mission of deliverance. But the conference resulted in a complete failure. Instead of getting C. C. to go in with them, he persuaded them to give nothing.

Though indeed a hard blow, this disappointment was far from a "knock-out." Having no such word as "fall" in our vocabulary, we added little by little to our fund until the Spring of 1877, Mr. Henry Villard came to Oregon. Being a man of public spirit and a warm friend of institutions of higher learning, he was invited by Judge Deady to visit the State University at Eugene. The judge advised us of the day he was to arrive, at the same time intimating that if he felt satisfied with existing conditions, he would doubtless make us a substantial contribution.

Arrangements were at once made to give Mr. Villard a suitable reception. The schools were to be dismissed, and the people generally were requested to assemble at the University to receive him. This they did in full force, early on the appointed day.

The whistle of the engine signaling the arrival of the train, the students, school children, and citizens formed themselves in an imposing line on both sides of the walk. These lines extended from the west entrance of the Campus up to the steps of Deady Hall. The Faculty committee and resident members of the Board of Regents had now received our distinguished guest at the depot.

Arriving at the 12th street entrance, Mr. Villard, with the reception committee, his colored servant following, walked, with hat in hand, between the two lines up to the building, the crowd falling in behind as he passed.

All assembled in the auditorium, our dear old friend, Prof. Thomas Condon, in his always appropriate and happy manner, introduced Mr. Villard as the friend of the young, and of institutions of higher learning. On rising, Mr. Villard was greeted by the whole assembly with a most hearty clapping of the hands.

Oh, how I wish I could give you his words, so simple and yet so earnest that at times he could hardly control his voice. Afterwards Mr. Villard, in charge of the Faculty and other members of the committee, was conducted through the building. He was more than pleased with Prof. Condon's geological collection, and those of us who did not know thought his estimate of it extravagant.

His inquiries were particular minute in regard to our financial condition and the needs of the school, which were fully explained to him. In short, the visit of this generous-hearted stranger resulted in his gift of $7000 to pay off all claims against the property. To him the honor is due for lifting the burden from hearts so long and sorely pressed, making good their pledge to the State to transfer the property free from incumbrance.

Words cannot express our gratitude to this unselfish man for his generous gift in the hour of our greatest need. His work on earth is now done and his body lies in some far distant grave, we know not where. If we could, how gladly and tenderly would we lay the Rosemary upon his breast today, in remembrance of his kindness to us, and the liberal endowment he subsequently made our University. Blessed be his memory.

Truths About College, by a Post-Graduate from Dallas

The Deady Bug

The Frosh may come and the Senior go,
As the flying years flit by,
But evermore in our college halls
The Deady Bug dwells for aye;
And when, as alumni, we return
And ramble about the place,
Still will we find, in the stranger throng,
The Deady Bug's kindly face.

And just as the class of nineteen 'leven
Signed up for "Zoology I,"
And whittled the Deady Bug's carcass up
To see how his legs hooked on,
So will the class of two thousand and two,
Signed up for zoology,
Carve at the Deady Bug's humble frame
With the same curiosity.

And the pigger will pig in the window seat,
Or roost on the winding stair;
And smile as he watches the Deady Bug
Crawl over his lady's hair.
Crawling the same in two thousand and two
As he does in the present day—
And the lady of then and the lady of now
Will screech in the selfsame way.

And the faculty that we honor now
Will sink in Gehenna's gloom,
But the Deady Bugs will perch serene
Immortal upon their tomb;
And when, as alumni, we return
To mourn the parted dead,
Lively and gay, the Bug will skate
On the bald spot of our head.

For Frosh may come and senior go,
While the wheels of swift years chug,
But ever and ever—world without end—
Still sticks the Deady Bug;
All things change in this changing world,
And the old to the new gives place,—
But still shall man on the campus spy
The Deady Bug's kindly face.

A Laugh in Time

When the Prof. laughs, laugh with him,
Do not let him laugh alone;
For a laughing stude can cop an A,
Where a glum one's obliged to bone.

When the Prof. snickers, giggle;
When the prof. giggles, roar;
For a laugh in time means a better grade
Than ever you got before.

What if the joke be rotten?
What if his humor's flat?
When a single titter may score an A,
Why care for a thing like that?

So, though he spring a chestnut,
Stifle your inner moan—
When the Prof. laughs, laugh with him;
Do not let him laugh alone.

The Endless Chain

She was a Senior and you a Frosh,
But your love was sweet and true;
You would forever be true to Her,
And likewise She to you;
You kissed farewell on Commencement Day,
And with tear-wet eyes She swore
That lovingly She would wait for you
'Til your college days were o'er.

You were a serious Sophomore
And a jaunty Junior was She,
(But not the same She you had loved
In your Freshman verdancy.)
For the Senior girl had waited long—
'Til the following year began,—
To transfer her troth from her Freshman boy,
To a bald-headed banker man.

But 'twas not so with your Junior Girl—
Forever that love should last;
You kissed goodbye on Commencement day,
And wished that vacation were passed,
And felt through the slumberous summer
days,
Your heart in your bosom stir
With yearnings for college time once more,
When you might be back by Her.

You were a Junior, a Soph'more She,
And where was the Junior maid?
She hung on the smiles of a giant Frosh
In football armor arrayed.
But you sighed no sigh for the fickle miss—
What more could a mortal wish
Than to gaze deep into the Soph'more's eyes,
As you bent o'er her chafing dish.

And the vows you vowed to the Junior maid
From the depths of your ardent soul,
You vowed to the Maid of the Chafing Dish
'Mid the incense that rose from its bowl.
Ah, bitter hard was the parting time—
Your love should ne'er pass away,
So you swore to the soft eyed Sophomore,
When you parted Commencement day.

You were a Senior and She— a lack,
Where was the Sophomore?
Wearing proudly the gold bjack O
Of a 'Varsity orator.
You were a Senior and She— a Frosh,
A dainty and dimpled miss,
With a smile as bright as a flash o' the sun,
And lips that were just made to kiss.

You were Her hero and she your Queen,
And your love was the more intense,
Because you had learned it from A to Z
Through three years' experience.
She wept when the day of parting came,
And your voice had a husky tone;
But, ah, you would wait and work for Her—
Your love was for Her alone.

Now She is a Soph and you are — out,
In the grip of the business whirl,
And back in the college a baseball chap
Is true to your Freshman girl;
And they will part on Commencement day,
With tear drops and bitter pain,
And next year a Frosh will take his place—
A link in the endless chain.

RETROSPECT

Pertinent Oskey Wow Wows

September 20.—Registration Day. Returning "students" hang around the registrar's office and hand out posies to their "dear professors." Many of the hopeful little boys and girls try the same caper and falter pitifully. Pan Hellenic Panic rages.

September 24.—President Campbell tells the "Frosh" about the Oxford student's "eight-hour" day and the "ultimate good of the University." Warns them against the truculent Sophomores and assures them that the faculty stool pigeon brigade will steer them safely to "Shut-eye" each evening. First issue of Emerald recites the tale of Summer weddings,—a la Howe. The girls say the new "rush rules" aren't nice.

October 1.—The "college men and women" return to register. "Bones" Allen interviews Prexy, sniffing for a yarn on some heinous hazing jaunt. However, no typographic froth results. 1913 has decided to respect the peevish constituency of higher education in the State of Oregon. Amen,—and long may she wave, whatever that means.

October 5.—C. Webster Robison dispenses "hot dogs" and inspires pipp at gym. Several revolver shots nip in the bud the corner on apples, contemplated by the Kappa Sigma freshmen. (Al Clark in his hysteria appeals to heaven.) Some Jack the Grab gets signal transversed and appropriates the whole line of green caps at the annual nursery gathering.

October 14.—Regent Friendly consents to speak at football rally, and the Roman mob scene is revived for another college year. Dean Collins joins the Y. M. C. A. and promises to attend church regularly. Koyl gets envious of this notoriety and eats his meals "down at Sid's."

October 19.—Tonsorial hazing antics at Corvallis passed up lightly by the State press. President Campbell squirms as he anticipates the tenor of the impending legislature.

"Please Me! all the fellows
weez 'em"

October 29.—Oregon Dry Parade. Our saintly, brotherly Divines from the Eugene Preacher Factory imbibe the "left foot high" spirit, swing their banner into line and scuff like regular cut-ups. The president of the University Y. W. C. A., et al., of the flock, swish through the streets in a Grecian chariot with this label: "Lips that touch liquor shall never touch mine." Breezy Lowell adds his, "No, mother, never." Kass Kilarney Kennedy, Egg Chocolate Holmes and Mister D. Oregana Dobie get jocular and ride in the procession with angelic grins smashed all over their front porches.

November 12.—The day of our delightful jaunt to Corvallis,—that Land of Utopia. All day long we were trailed by persistent reception committees. After the game our victorious team was lifted bodily to the dressing room on the shoulders of the gracious natives. Wallace Cooley was invited to play ping-pong at one of the hardware stores and the sight of a gayly decorated tally-ho filled with University sympathizers was cheered to the echo by the well-mannered Aggie rooters. In their spasm of hospitality they even insisted that Hawley Bean go home with them instead of "stopping" at the Occidental Hotel. Certain public-spirited barbers bestowed the franking privilege upon Sigglin,—the alleged Aggie booster,—in return for favors shown them by Sigglin while there on a former visit. President Campbell's parting speech at the depot was given an ovation by our genial friends and neighbors. And the most touching sight of all was to see them rush frantically to the relief of a "sickly" University student who had "fainted" on the station platform. (In passing it may be noticed that this student has since regained vigor enough to outdistance all of his friendly adversaries in the 220 sprint at the Columbia Meet, April 8. This will no doubt prove refreshing to our Red Cross folks over the way.) Oh! joyous days,—wasn't it jolly?

November 16.—Oregon Agricultural College students granted student rule. Gunhilda Skinbones sends us kisses and motherly greetings sprinkled with honey and soothing syrup.

December 5.—Dr. Schmidt votes for Professor Straub as Justice of the Peace. A senior girl from Salem receives congratulations upon the election of Bill Main as football captain. Quiet little freshman at the Gamma Phi House admits that she is afraid of the moon. Art Means, Jack Luckey, Bob Farris and a bunch of Sigma Chis supe it as the jury in "Madame X."

December 10.—Typhoid bubble bursts despite all precaution. The President advises, "Wash your faces and all vegetables in boiled water." Hot water wagon installed. W. M. Beals impersonates a man in dramatic club play the "Innocent Victim." Latourette attends classes one entire day without referring to his habitat by the Falls.

December 16.—An attractive Varsity girl appears on the campus in a fetching brown hobble skirt which tips her perceptibly as she ascends the Library steps. She is wearing a new fraternity pin said by some to be Brick Michael's. A Kappa Sigma freshman is dispatched to write letter to Sioux McKenzie. At assembly, Dr. Sheldon makes sarcastic reference to "men with long hair and women with short hair."

Vacation Time.—Zip Boom Bee'ers say they are tired of playing ball against "those horrid Eugene ruffians." Say they nearly always get beaten anyhow. Rhodes Scholarship Committee asked our man if he was at all worldly, and, confessing that he danced, Collins was objected to by one university president on the ground that his education was going to the wrong extremity. Several of the "Boes" were remembered by Santa with neckties. All the co-eds stock up in fresh headgear and fancy throat appendages. One or two of our kittenish young professors participate in Portland's New Year festivity.

January 14.—Prospective martyrs attend the Commonwealth Exercises. Students give visitors real treat at which Prexy Collier "takes the liberty to call on a few at random." Three Friars reluctantly peep at their notes and fill in the gaps with learned words. Collier imitates a certain Professor's "Yes, uhm, uhm, ah, ah," and, as usual, "believes so too,—that it would be a fine thing."

January 18.—In speaking of the South at Assembly, Dr. Bennett assures us that "A mule, a nigger and a cotton patch work in harmony as affinities." Mercer and Carter coming. The "Mercerized Kids" (Beta Theta Pi,—with apologies to Stanford), are seen cleaning house, with "Pepita" Warner as chief vaudevillist. Professor Thurber reads passages from Chanticleer to his Daily Theme class and tells them how little chicks act on the stage. Rooster Fighter Gilles is summarily dubbed "Chanticleer" by the Emerald, being a self confessed Woman Hater.

January 20.—Mary Mannering in "A Man's World." A cluster of girls at each sorority sit up till very late in an attempt to "figure it out." Peggy McNair and Cecil Miller each arrive at definite conclusions.

January 25.—The mighty legislature comes to our town in a body. Between the several "feeds" they find time to make the one promise that was expected of them. "Grad. Ben Huntington," in stepping to the front of Villard rostrum, roars a bit about it being the "proudest moment" of his young life. Senator Sinnott happily assures us that all the mossbacks about the Dalles country are either buried or else in Dr. Condon's museum. We crowd the library and other buildings, as they are being visited by the lawmakers, in order to show them forcibly how we are handicapped for want of buildings and equipment.

February 2.—Father Straub snoops around and discovers that a crowd of the boys have been drinking milk. Afraid that the dear little children will be infected with typhus germs, he stirs up a muss in the faculty which results in the customary Alphonse-Gaston whitewash. (A goodly number of these Mellin's Food babies appear at President Campbell's church, the next Sunday.) Mid-term examinations enter as incidental diversion.

February 10.—According to precedent, many of the freshmen boohoo and "take on,"—feeling sure that they have busted out in every one of their hours. Curtis, Geisler, Beals and Martin form a poker club. Walker, of Independence, takes fourth degree as Dean of Women.

February 17.—Oregon out-tussles University of Washington in first basketball game, blessed with the feeling that its path to the championship was to be strewn with roses and adulation. Professor Thurber, after censuring one of his English Seven hopefuls for the "vicious" use of an "atrocious" adjective, draws these fine distinctions: "A horse sweats, a man perspires, while a woman is all aglow."

February 25.—First annual county fair held in the University gymnasium. Everyone dips in for a big, tall, time and all but a conspicuous few spend freely,—for the sake of Great, Good Charity. Dr. Cloran emerges long enough to annex a new mess of minstrel jokes for dispensation in the blissful department of Romance Languages.

March 3.—Dr. Gilbert moans woefully as he recites to his Seager class "the pains and sacrifices of postponing marriage." Someone asks Instructor Lussy who pays him for carrying his hat in hand. He frankly confesses, "The State of Oregon." Dan Mitchell seen smiling. "Prexy" Yadon risks a haircut.

March 10.—Sigma Chis get busy with their searchlight and lend publicity to two new infatuations. A sorority house mother is enraged and foams via telephone. One ardent swain swears that if they touch him with their "guldurned" rays he will blow the whole fraternity out of existence. Jamie seen sparring at the gym. Incidental to our college life, Carlton Spencer out-talks everyone in the State Oratorical contest, and wins some applause.

March 15.—Gamma Delta Gamma win the Emerald Cup,—Champions of the inter-sorority league. Our athletic girls now settle down to nurse their scratches and replenish their hair-dressing. Dr. Mitchell makes a "raise." No one knows what it is but it has a point. Onthank and Strong stung with jobs on the Junior Annual. Some serenaders get soused with bucketfuls of fluid ingredients while pestering the Tri-Delts.

March 22.—Freshman class hour committee dopes out a yellow poster program almost equal in wit and sentiment to these babblings which you have been reading here. Editor of Oregana is suddenly threatened with blindness and rushes to Portland to consult specialist. Jefferson Lord Roberts and F. Snookums Waite, in a last desperate effort to land some official title, decide to initiate a Black-thorne Club.

April 1.—Mrs. Pennel glances at the calendar and foregoes kissing any of the girls. Professor Stafford warns his students not to overstudy. Ed. Hines says he is done with pugilism.

April 5.—Mr. Roosevelt slaps the referendum instigators and makes a few derisive remarks anent our freshmen yearlings. Three prominent co-eds assert that they do not admire Teddy "the least bit." Miss Wise reports that Wisconsin year book men are flunked out each year according to an old tradition.

April 8.—The Kappa Alpha Thetas endeavor to outdo the Gamma Delta Gamma and Gamma Phi Beta formals. Not having been invited to any of these ultra affairs, the writer begs to withhold his private estimate as all sorority gossip is so clanish and treacherous. And, besides, his life is not insured. For the fifth consecutive year, Oregon's track team outpoints all contenders at the Columbia Indoor Meet,—the Oregon Agricultural College attending.

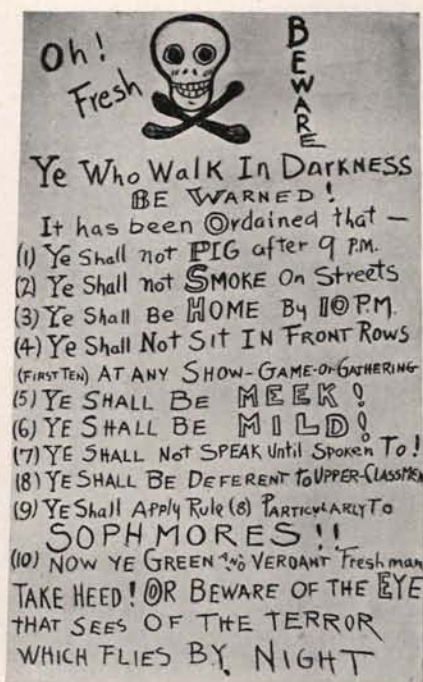

April 12.—Charlie Robison frowns on the contaminating influence of down town pool rooms and prays, via Emerald communication, that he be allowed to play in campus atmosphere. In his mad rush for final copy, Barbour, Manager of the Oregana, enlists the services of a dark-haired Tri-Delt. Faculty announces that no quizzes will be held during the week out of deference to Spring vacation and the unexpected snow storm. Prof. Howe asks for difference between an educated and co-educated man.

April 15.—Ma and pa are told how things are done at college. We celebrate Hat Day by eating several chicken eggs,—also fresh fruit, jelly and a few other staples which we have been accustomed to at college.

May 10.—The greatest and best Oregana is distributed to the clamoring throngs. Votes of thanks are extended for the many sweet comments contained in the book. Every detail meets the unqualified approval of the most skeptical. The manager and editor escape the embrace of hovering friends long enough to figure out a course for summer school. Then they lapse into a state of coma mumbling this laconic oath: "Never again."

The Fate of Hazing at Oregon

Hazing has never been encouraged at Oregon. But for years, more or less organized initiation took place each Fall, when the bulk of the Fresh crop was lined up and "put through" in a body.

Finally the faculty set its foot down definitely and promised immediate expulsion to all parties found guilty of the so-called hazing. The class of 1911 was threatened with this edict but they played their tat-too on us just the same, and we are mighty glad that they did.

We, the class of 1912, were the first to get the ax. It was a fine little party, with all the usual embellishments, but there were even too many adjuncts,—a coterie of spies. So we were dragged out on the carpet before the scowling advisory committee and subjected to sweat-box proceedings. Four were summarily suspended and the remainder of "The Twenty-Two" were placed on probation.

This Fall, the Class of 1913 thought too well of their reputation and allowed the Verdants to go their way peacefully. So now, with the negative precedent once established it seems probable that all class action in the future will be limited to the milder substitute now in the process of silent evolution.

Thus, 1912 is apt to remain unique in history. It was the last class to take its medicine without squealing, the first and only to get the faculty can, and, at the same time, the last class to bless the Newcomers with the healthful influence of a few fatherly touches. And those of us who participated in those 1908 and 1909 manuevers are happy to preserve them as among the best experiences of our college days.

The accompanying pictures may serve as remnants of this era of hazing. The placard labeled "Oh! Fresh, Beware!", in the shape of huge tree posters, was the first sign of greeting extended to the class of 1912 as it ventured upon the campus in the Fall of 1908.

For fear you might accuse us of inconsistency we shall not tell you when the other picture was taken. But it wasn't hazing, exactly,—it was simply a case of dormitory discipline,—and Freshman Johnson may feel thankful that it happened.

The Conversion of Shorty's Dad

"The jig's up," muttered Shorty, as he rushed into the smoking room of the Kappa Chi fraternity house. "The jig's up. I tell you—it's all over with Shorty."

"What's the row?" asked Rusty, looking up from his novel. The four students engaged in the pinochle game on the corner table stopped abruptly in their work and even "Pete" Burns, the lovesick, who was writing at another table, paused in the work of editing his "Daily News" for the little girl at home. The smoking room routine was brought to a standstill, for such an announcement as Shorty had just made, implied one of three things at Runyon college: either Shorty had been caught "cribbing;" had flunked out of college; or had been dropped from the football squad.

A volley of "Well?"s was hurled at Shorty as he dejectedly sank into a chair.

"Show a little pipp," said Fat Smith, in his high squeaky voice. This announcement brought forth a general smile for Fat's 'pipp'—or nerve, whichever Runyon college men saw fit to call it—was the smallest element in his otherwise well-rounded make-up.

This was too much for Shorty. Like the hero of a melodrama he took the center of the stage, jerked a letter from his hip pocket, waived it in the air and then pointed it at "Fat" who had retired to a corner. Then with a voice filled with sympathy, Shorty began to read:

"My dear son—

Prepare to come home. Your last request was too much. I can afford to give you an education, but I am not a mint. Mother and I believe you could do better here in the store. Will be in Runyon on the 15th and will personally investigate your condition and convince myself that my action is justified. You promised to send us your grades each month. They were 'your' grades I received all right, for Widow Simpkins tells your mother that 'E' does not always stand for 'excellent.' You promised to attend church each Sunday, still you have never mentioned the church, the minister nor the endeavor society. You promised not to play football and now I make no accusation, boy; I am coming to investigate. My business instinct, sharpened by many years of hard work, tells me something is wrong. Will see you on the 15th.

"Devotedly

"Pa."

"I would say to hell with Widow Simpkins" broke in Ben Horton, captain of Runyon's team. This exclamation from the biggest man in college, met with neither surprise nor disapproval, for all realized that the captain would feel the loss of Shorty, his right end mainstay, much more than would the fraternity, the loss of their "E" student.

Pete suggested they ought to keep the old man away, and after this enlightening bit of wisdom, to which no attention was paid, he began to write furiously, that this new bit of Runyon gossip might reach the little girl at home on the morrow's train. Rusty, who had just finished a chapter in "The Romance of Upper Ten," very appropriately suggested that the train be wrecked. Lou Williams, a freshman with some brains and some good opinions, which, under ordinary circumstances, he knew enough to keep to himself, suggested they should try to change the old man's views, after which he was politely told to "key down" by both the novelist and the man of letters.

"Frosh' has the right idea, fellows; that's the only course open," said the football captain. Clearly Shorty's up against a stiff proposition. The old man's nobody's fool. Just look at that letter—it's a masterpiece of sarcasm, frankness, firmness, suspicion and truth—and just as businesslike as a death warrant.

"That's what it is," meekly suggested "Fat," as far as Shorty is concerned."

"It's evident he's here for two things—religion and grades. We must get religion and make the grades, and get the old boy out of town again before the big Grinnell game. But how? Fellows, I've a plan. A few of us have more or less an idea of religion; we must all be preachers, as it were, for the time being. Catch the idea?"

"That's too much," remarked Fat. "Make it missionaries or plain deacons, and I'm on."

Ben continued: "You fellows do as I say. Frosh, you're my right hand man; and Shorty, well, don't overdo the family's religious limitations. Leave the rest to me—do what you are told and don't be surprised at anything short of a holiday. I can do it."

The boys of Kappa Chi had but little to say. The football hero had devised a scheme—they all knew, but as to what it was, all were in the dark. Ben's judgment and determination, however, had won many a battle for Runyon, and his frat brothers, like the members of the 'Varsity team, fell into line and listened for signals—for they had all confidence in their man.

The next four days were spent in careful preparation for the reception of Shorty's dad. There was a mysterious air of secrecy and quiet about the Kappa Chi house, which caused no little comment among the various other frat men who were accustomed to pass the house. The old man would arrive Thursday morning. Just before retiring Wednesday evening, Captain Ben gave his final orders: "Everybody up at 6:30—remember what I've told you—keep your heads, don't talk much and leave the rest to Frosh and me."

The Spiritual Life at Kappa Chi

Runyon College, situated in a middle western state, was the only asset claimed by the citizens of the little country town of Keota. The school was a sectarian institution of seven hundred students, endowed by the good Baptists of the state, and perhaps the union. It had originally been a non-sectarian college, but at a sudden turn in its career, it had been placed under the wing of the Baptist church, whereupon an era of unprecedented growth began for both college and town. Retired farmers, religiously inclined, settled by the score in old Keota, that their children might receive proper educational training in the fundamentals,—“readin’, writin’, ‘rithmetic,” and also a good healthy course in Scripture. Even if scholarship requirements were not high at Keota, students were obliged to make up for it in chapel attendance; that is, they were supposed to make up for it and probably two-thirds of them did. However, this story concerns the other third.

Of late years, along with the marvellous growth of the school, fraternities crept into the college. The first clubs were frowned upon by the faculty members, but no definite opposition was taken. Eventually wicked boys joined these fraternities, for whom football furnished more fascination than the weekly hours of worship. According to Prof. Featherstone, of the department of theology, several of these questionables had been seen smoking cigarettes. Then there was the O'Brien affair, which continually added to the faculty worries. The tone of athletics at Runyon had formerly been high indeed, but of late there had been rumors that Ed O'Brien, town marshal of Keota until 4:00 o'clock each day, and the mainstay of the college football eleven in the position of right tackle, was being paid by the athletic department, as well as by the city. Ed, it was true, was registered in college, taking chapel and football—chapel on Wednesday afternoons, and football the rest of the time. But the charges could not be sustained, so the faculty continued to fret.

Other good church patrons of the college knew but little of the troubles at Runyon, for President Cole discreetly withheld any information that was not “in line with the booster movement.” Old man Alexander, Shorty's dad, had heard much of the fame of old Runyon, and, being a devout churchman, had decided that in old Keota, lay his son's redemption. One year and $800 the boy had already spent at Runyon—and now—within two weeks of the close of the football season, he was to be cruelly taken from his college pursuits by an irate pa.

So it was that when the Chicago Limited steamed into Keota, the following morning, Captain Horton, Shorty and four other well-groomed young men most politely shook hands with the stern, middle-aged and rather rural looking gentleman, whom Shorty spoke of,—for the first time—as “father.”

“We'll walk to the house,” said Shorty. “It's only a little way. Here Lou will you PLEASE carry father's grip?”

‘Please’—To a freshman!

Rusty nudged Pete and Fat checked himself just in time to keep from saying things appropriate to the occasion. Freshman Lou was so deeply moved by this unusual courtesy that he forgot the meaning of the polite request, and the football captain quietly picked up the suitcase, as the old man and his youthful body guard started for Kappa Chi.

Had an “old grad” dropped in to visit the brothers at this time he would have felt very much out of place. The house had been cleaned up, and everything was as neat and tidy as any private home in Keota. One room, on the upper floor, was locked, however, and could the old grad have peeped into that room, he would have felt much easier. A pile of old clothes, tobacco jars, bottles, cigarette stubs, Durham sacks and pictures of women (other than co-eds and sweethearts), had been taken from floors, walls, and shelves, and temporarily placed in this extra room.

At a suggestion from Horton, Mr. Alexander opened the breakfast with a blessing—the first prayer ever offered in the Kappa Chi dining room. The strange invocation brought a violent sneeze from "Fat," and as he left the dining room, Frosh came to the rescue by telling Mr. Alexander that "Fat" hadn't been well all Fall, and the boys were worried about him."

The morning was spent in a trip about the town, the elder Alexander desiring to postpone his official visit to the college until the second day. Ben, Lou and Shorty, proudly pointed out the few places of interest in Keota,—the big elevator, the new three-story building, which, when completed, would be the highest structure in the county. Nor did the guides neglect the churches. The line of march took them all in—and doubled back over the same route.

"Howard," said the elder to Shorty, as the party passed a certain church, the cornerstone of which looked more familiar to Mr. Alexander than to his son, "why can't we run in and see the pastor?"

"He isn't at home," promptly answered Shorty.

"That so?" asked the elder.

"Sure of it," said Shorty, and then Ben, noticing a strange face peering from the pastor's study, added:

He's coming over tonight to meet you, Mr. Alexander. He'll be at the house for dinner, and you can talk to him there. Oh, yes, he's a great friend of the bunch—comes over often."

"Every Thursday evening," added Frosh. Then he fixed his index finger on the new library building two blocks down the street and the party continued its righteous path, just as the Rev. Mr. Wimberly stepped out on the porch and gazed inquiringly after the quartette.

While luncheon was in progress Ben was talking over the phone to a Beta Mu:

"We've got to have a preacher tonight for dinner, or it's all off with Shorty. Fix up Deacon Randolph. Anything will do, but remember, he's Rev. Wimberly for the evening."

The elder Alexander was really not so unfavorably impressed after all. The boys were courteous and polite, and the neat house was a compliment to their manner of living. He noticed the gentlemanly conduct, the lack of tobacco smoke, and was very pleasantly surprised—so much so in fact, that his conscience seemed to hurt him, and he wished to put off, as long as possible, the investigation which had inspired his visit. The afternoon was very quietly spent in his son's room, writing to Shorty's mother, and discussing with his son, all subjects except grades and religion. Now and then he smiled a warm, pleasant smile, as he thought how the boys were unconsciously conforming to his ideals.

At 6:15 "Deacon" Randolph, arrayed in the conventional garb of the ministry, appeared on the steps of Kappa Chi. "Deacon," so-called from his striking resemblance to any and all preachers, was a team-mate of the other two boys, and was ready to carry out the part of Mr. Wimberly. The boys all greeted Deacon politely, and the elder Alexander was agreeably surprised as he noted the good feeling existing. As the boys started into the dining room, a half hour later, the mere thought of an invocation given by a Beta Mu in a preacher's suit, was too much for "Fat." Once again did he sneeze, and fourteen other young men, realizing the disastrous ending of such a meal, betook themselves to the attic instead of to the dinner table. Those who sat down to the meal were the Rev. Mr. Wimberly, the Elder Alexander, Ben Horton, "Frosh," and Shorty. As the five started their dinner, the fifteen from the attic filed down stairs, out into the street, down past the church and—eventually into the pool hall in the next block; all of which occurred as the Thursday prayer meeting bells were ringing in the church tower.

"Yes, we are rather severe on our undergraduates," said Ben, leaning over towards Shorty's dad, "but it makes better men of them to have to attend the mid-week service. We almost forgot about it tonight."

"And do you all go every Thursday?" asked Mr. Alexander, thinking of the few times he himself had been seen at prayer meeting in the last ten years.

"Every one of us," asserted Ben. "The old boys set the example, and the younger chaps have no excuse for not attending." Then he shyly, half apologetically stammered: "Unless—unless—we have company. Then of course some of us must stay at home."

"And you, Mr. Wimberly? Am I keeping you away?" meekly asked Mr. Alexander.

"Not in the least," replied the holy man. "Tonight is students' hour—the service is wholly in the hands of my flock and my presence has been excused for the evening."

When father and son retired about ten o'clock that night, the old man's heart was filled with pride for his boy—for all the boys. He had enjoyed a long visit with the Rev. Mr. Wimberly, and had learned among other things, that the Kappa Chis would be in Heaven long before any members of the Runyon faculty.

The Master Builder

"Well, what are they learnin' you, boy?"

Shorty and his father were seated in what had formerly been the Kappa's smoking room, but now looked more like the reception room of the Runyon Y. M. C. A. Most of the Kappa Chis had started for their "9:00 o'clocks" about half an hour early, that they might enjoy the sweet fragrance of their after-breakfast cigarettes. Only one or two stragglers remained.

Ben, the old gentleman noticed, was taking a personal interest in his welfare, waiting on him, and ever ready to assist the son in the father's entertainment. Mr. Alexander appreciated this thoughtful quality in Ben's make-up, and his heart went out to the football man for this unusual courtesy. So, when Ben sauntered into the smoking room, and sat down before the fire with the other two, Mr. Alexander felt perfectly free to continue his discussion with his son on this rather delicate subject. It was the delicacy of the subject that had brought Ben into the room, for he knew that some time today—Friday, and the 13th, too—the father would wish to visit the campus, the college, the classrooms and—the profs, and he realized that if ever Shorty needed the moral and spiritual assistance of a fraternity brother, it would be during the trying hour when "Prof" and "Pa" should gaze into each others' eyes and exchange their motherly confidences. Ben had determined, during the early morning hours, that this meeting should not take place unless his other schemes were thwarted. Although his attempts to delude old Prof. Featherstone on three former occasions had failed, Ben was determined to try it once more, if their visitor should demand a consultation with the wise and learned doctor. So, with a copy of "The Morning Clarion" before him, he pulled his chair over close to the window and while father and son talked Ben listened.

"What are you takin' son?" again queried the father.

"Why, my course is much harder this year than last," began Shorty. "Have history, Latin, English, lit., Bible study and ethics. And when the old man's face scowled just a wee bit, Ben added:

"Don't forget manual training, Shorty."

"What kind of training?" the father asked.

"Manual training—where we make things for the home—tables, chairs, farm implements, etc. I'm taking it for its practical value. Oh, I'm going to make the old place look entirely different when I get home next summer," proudly asserted Shorty.

The elder seemed rather pleased at this last pursuit. The boys didn't fail to notice it, and Ben winked his approval to Shorty.

"You should be proud of your son's work in manual training. Last spring (while only a freshman), he won two medals for efficient work, one for fence building, and the other for work in the fields."

Shorty needed no further hint. He went out of the room like a shot from a gun, took the stairs four at a jump, and half a minute later, proudly handed his father two gold medals, his name engraved on both of them, one for "fencing," and the other for "field events:—hammer, 1st; discus 2nd." Shorty had honestly won them both the previous year, but knowing his father's aversion for athletics and duelling, which the old man considered to be about one and the same thing, Shorty had failed to mention his achievements in his home letters.

"What? You thoughtless kid! Why didn't you tell us? You a fence builder? And field events? General farming, I suppose? This is fine, boy! I almost wish we were back on the old farm again, eh, son?"

The last suggestion made Shorty sick at heart. He tried to smile, but all he could do was to solemnly say in an "I-did-it-with-my-little-hatchet" voice:

"That's what I figured on, father!"

"You see," explained Ben, "the fencing contest is one of the big things at Runyon. Each student who qualifies for the finals, or the six with the highest standing in the department, must design and construct a fence, which is practical and durable, as well as pleasing to the eye. Shorty denies it, but the boys think he's had experience in fencing before. Now, hasn't he, Mr. Alexander?"

"Oh, Lord," thought Shorty, "what next?"

"Why the little devil never nailed a picket in his whole life,—but it ain't sayin' he won't," chuckled the old man. "The sly fox—I see now why he's never mentioned manual training. You young reprobate!" And then he chuckled his son in the ribs, slapped his own knee and laughed.

The old man's joyous outburst had given Ben's imagination a chance to create a few new track events, which had never before been pulled off at Runyon field meets. He saw that Mr. Alexander's heartstrings had been touched by his son's modest achievements, and he decided to play the strings for all they were worth. The many faculty meetings at which Ben's presence had been respectfully requested, had given the athlete a good education in the development of the imagination, the art of baffling long-faced profs with strange tales of momentary creation.

"Shorty's blamed modest—he would never dream of telling his father these things," Ben asserted, and Shorty submissively bowed his head and smiled. "Look at the field events," he continued, "first place with the hammer; second place with the discus. The hammer prize is given to the best all-round carpenter in college; the other prize for the man who can apply the discus to the soil in the most practical and yet scientific manner. Howard got third in the plow, too, but the two Dickson boys from out on Muddy creek, took first and second in that event. They've done nothing all their lives but plow, but believe me, Mr. Alexander, Shorty made them work some. But when it comes to using the hammer or building fences—why, I'll wager half the farmers in Runyon valley either use one of Shorty's fence designs or carry out his disc idea in the cultivation of their land."

Shorty's modesty told him he'd better go out and get a little fresh air—which he did. The old man's eyes sparkled. What was history, ethics or Latin, compared to this practical knowledge? He forgot all about grades and all else. Already in his mind he had traded back the store for the old farm, where Shorty's early years had been spent. But he must see some of his son's work! Where were the fences? A visit to the manual training department must be made at once. But the department, Ben explained, was never opened on Friday. There was, however, one of Shorty's fences in use at the Burnside farm, a few miles south of town, and if he wished, they would drive out that way. Wish it? Why the old man would willingly walk ten miles to see it. And so, before they realized what had taken place, the three were stepping into a livery rig, and Ben promised the father that they would be back in plenty of time to see the professors, who went to their homes at 2:30 on Friday afternoons.

The rig carried them out over Runyon's southern hills and far into the country. It was a joyous ride for the trio. The old man was happy, for just about half of the fences were found to have been originally designed by Shorty. Ben's heart was light because every distant fence was like an oasis in the desert—it drew them on further and further away from the profs. And Shorty—well, he was happy on general principles. At last when Ben was certain they would be unable to get back before 2:30, THE fence was discovered, a pretty white affair that enclosed a neat country home. The old man wanted to get out and visit the place—but Ben told him they wouldn't have time to meet the professors if they did, so they swung about, and started on the homeward journey, arriving at the campus about fifteen minutes after the last professor had bade the week-end farewell to old Runyon. Ben was grieved, on their visitors account, and blamed Shorty for driving home so slowly. Shorty blamed Ben, and their wrath increased, as they found classroom after classroom—locked. Both were profuse in their apologies, but Mr. Alexander did not seem to notice their remarks. In fact he did not hear them, for he was more interested in landscape gardening than in interior decorations just at this time. His gaze shifted from the neat fence about the president's house, to the wall about the football field; then he looked far off over the autumn fields, towards the southern horizon, and under his breath he muttered: "The little devil—the little devil."

The following evening, the triumphant march from the Kappa Chi house to the depot was made by 22 light-hearted Kappas. The elder had been convinced, and Shorty was allowed to remain. The old man was "tickled stiff" as Shorty, that same night, expressed it, and the jolly body-guard was a genuine treat for the old man. In that eventful trip to the depot, the departing guest was "one of the boys" in every sense of the word. He forgot his dignity, his suspicions, and even the Rev. Mr. Wimberly; and talked more like an old grad than a stern father. And when the Limited shrieked a farewell whistle, as it passed out of the city limits, Mr. Alexander left the back platform and made his way toward the smoking car, where he enjoyed the first cigar in many long days—and again he chuckled to himself. He remained in the smoking car most of the evening, and thought of the fine crowd of exemplary young men that it had been his good fortune to meet, and his son's good fortune to live with.

And back in the little old smoking room at Runyon, twenty-two exemplary young men puffed at their cigarettes and discussed their Monday's lessons,—like fine young men always do, near the close of the football season.

Extracts from "Her" Diary at College

Sunday night.—Diaries seem useless things. One never does dare to say anything very personal in them. If I do, I always feel as though I were being watched, so I just stick to facts. And all the names I use I just make up,—out of the initials of real people; and then, of course, people (if any one were to read this), wouldn't understand. One always feels so foolish if one is asked about keeping a diary. I'd never dare say I do,—but it will be nice to read over after I'm married.

I wish something exciting would happen. Went to church. Nobody interesting there. Superb Blonde had a new hat,—rather ugly. The Sweet Cat, Little Hen and the Petite Wren were all out; funny that Fresh Daisies and French Cowslip and A. Kiss weren't there. Someone told me that the rest of Gamma Phis go to the Presbyterian Church. I don't think their freshmen ever go though,—I never saw A. Heathen or Elite Cow at any church. Met the Great Bear on the way home. Said he was writing an article on debate for the Monthly. Had rubbers on,—guess he forgot to take them off last time it rained.

Had dinner and told T.L.'s with the girls till four o'clock. Heard some peaches. Gay Curis told me a dreamy one from Divine Winker. But she fibbed. Don't believe any of the Sigma Nu's ever say nice things about us,—only the ones that are engaged, and I'm not sure about that either. Went for short stroll to see who might be on the race, and saw Happy Boy scrubbing his teeth on the Kappa Sig back porch. I bet he just got up. Wouldn't his hair be pretty on a girl? Had supper! Boys came over and we sang. Dear Lamb sang a lot. Sunday's a stupid day. Made candy. Went up stairs at ten o'clock. Studied hard for hours. I'm going to bed early this week,—on my way now, its ten-thirty. Hope tomorrow's exciting!

Monday night.—Nothing doing. Went to classes. Trained Cut-throat posted me in French. Unfair, I was there all but ten times last month. Spring is here,—all the dames have new hats. They're hideous. I'm going to have a beauty. Cut English and talked to Rather Malicious in the Library. Told him the Emerald wasn't fair, so we fought fierce. Heard that How Horrid gave a quizz. Missed it! Don't care. Rained all afternoon. Met Big Prim,—curls all out. Always knew her hair was straight. Count Max brought me home under his umbrella but he let me carry three books. I know a lovely scandal. We talked it over a few minutes this evening. Came up at nine-thirty to go to bed. All my resolutions are broken 'cause it's twelve-thirty. The Delta Sig lights are on,—wonder if that Cute Wooer is still studying.

Tuesday night.—It's nice to keep a diary,—one can say things in it that one wants to say, but that would kill one if they thought any one would ever hear them. Wouldn't it be TOO grand to be engaged? Tonight I saw Coming Bride (sp?) and Big Cuddler. They were walking and the moonlight,—mebbe I'm romantic—but it seemed TOO sweet. If they only do get married. Someone told me that college affairs are foolish; but no one would ever get engaged if they weren't going to get married, would they? I wonder if any other Theta's are really engaged. How Beautous and Burnt Man are awfully cute and so are Ticked Boy and Just Cute. Oh, well,*mebbe when I get to be a Senior I'll get engaged. I'm going to bed. Lovely moon tonight. Seems wasted and useless. Saw Always Chatting and Loyal Pardner just pass. She's awfully bright, isn't she?

Wednesday night.—Never can spell Wenesday right. Tri Delts are having a party. I wasn't invited,—hump! I'm going to be more serious from now on and only write real earnest things in my diary. I wonder if any girls in college are boy crazy? Our house mother said some were. Once How Horrid and I'm Great mentioned boy-craziness in classes. They don't agree on even little things like that! Went to classes. Had a music lesson. Went up the race. Count Max was on the Kappa Sig porch. Gee! wouldn't it be great to go some place with someone really wonderful like Sad Lad! They say he has twenty-nine football pictures of himself,—all different. He's a swell kid, all right. There's a lovely college man poster at Schwartzchild's. I'm going to get it, mebbe. Wonder if the girls will think some man gave it to me?

Thursday night.—Absolutely nothing doing. I wish something would happen. Winsome Wheedler went home today. The Kappa Alpha Theta's will sure miss her. She broke down from overdoing and excitement. It's just awful the way we girls go out. Dance almost every week end and big parties galore. Bought seven cute curls today for $3.00. They don't match well, but they are a bargain all right.

Friday night.—Cut all afternoon. Went up race. Saw Ever Singing and Bert Pacificator in a canoe. Wonder why she wasn't teaching? Tonight we had nineteen callers. Bet we beat the other houses! Always Noisy has lost her voice. Funny? Hope she forgets how to talk. She always did talk too much. Oh, its nice when the boys come. I JUST LOVE FRIDAY!

Saturday Night.—Cleaned house. Hate it. Kappa Sigma dance. I was crazy to go. Wouldn't,—just hate that old rag of mine, and I knew every one would wear new dresses. Lent my curls to one of the girls. And someone else wore my slippers. Besides,—there was a moon and it would have just been wasted. Someone told me that all the girls spoon. I don't believe it. OH! why didn't I go to the dance, anyway. I'd go now if I had to wear a kitchen apron. I just can't wait to hear who took whom and if any queer couples were there. I don't see why the girls don't come. I wonder how my curls looked? Hope my slippers hurt her. After all it was only a dance! I'm going to be above them. They are only for the young and very miniature. Oh, why don't the girls come? I want to know if Great Bore was there.

(Signed) Natural Lee.

Differences

Two lovers walked in the spring time;
He had just called her "honey and dove,"
And they each wondered there in the silence
What the other was then thinking of.

(He thinks)

Wonder who'll pitch for the home team today?

Good Heck, how these new shoes do hurt!
Hello,—there's a new one on me. Gad—
I'm asking who's that nifty flirt.
Avaunt! how I wish I was out with the bunch!

It's nix on the steady affair.
I wonder if after we're married
She'll still wear a rat in her hair?

(She thinks)

I wonder if John noticed how I am dressed?
There goes that Miss Jones rigged in black.

Hm! I wonder if mother was careful
When she did up those hooks in my back?
I wonder if Mamie will marry?

There's that handsome chap out now with Grace,

I do hope he takes me down to the grill,—
The dear boy has just the happiest face.
L'Envoi.

Two lovers walked in the spring time,
Engaged? So they say,—quite a while;
And the thoughts that they thought and those that they told
Are those that now make you smile.

Miss 1908 Writes Advice to Miss 1914

Gertrude dear:—

So you are at Oregon at last! Did that senior who took you to the Junior Prom last year get you there or was it the freshman who gave you his fraternity pin last summer, that persuaded you? I can see you smile. Don't worry,—I know. You entered because you are fully determined "to be somebody in the intellectual world."

You have majored in English, haven't you? Deary me, so did I. And you're taking a lot of lecture courses, aren't you? And the lectures are all on subjects concerning conditions of the times. I took the same ones. Soon you begin to figure out how you can improve the conditions of the working girls,—why the trusts are detrimental. But, Gerty, don't get too blue about it all, and remember it would be nice to be the daughter of a trust president.

And the Theta Phis took you in. I knew they would. Who rushed you most, the Theta boys or girls? But, Gertrude, little cousin, I must hasten with this letter. I have so much to say, so much advice to give you, though you probably won't make the same mistakes that I made in 1904. You've always told me all your troubles and experiences, and I hope you keep it up. It will bring back dear old memories to me.

Have you been on the race yet, in a canoe, in the moonlight? If you haven't, I wouldn't go if I were you. The faculty doesn't approve. But I can't help wondering if the trees still bend way over in the same old places. Don't get in the habit of taking long Sunday afternoon walks, honey, especially in the Springtime,—there's such a lot of poison oak you in Hendricks Park. And there's another thing, dear, don't spend your afternoons on Lovers Lane. You know that's the walk between the race and the river. I heard a man propose to a girl there once. The walk out Alder, too, used to be shunned in my days because so many profs. moved out that way.

My! my! those dear old times! Gerty, you will meet all sorts of people,—boys in particular. You'll meet the senior who will take a fatherly interest in you, and then instruct some freshman at his house to take you to the next dance. Don't put much faith in seniors, dear,—they are so fickle and forgetful. The junior you meet will flirt dreadfully. Beware those jolly juniors with their corduroys and pipes! Perhaps some soph. will tell you all his troubles. Sophs always have trouble. They'll tell you most anything, too. But never pump,—it's so hard to keep what you find out. But the freshmen,—I'll trust you with them, Gertrude, because I know you won't care for freshmen very much. They will remind you too much of home and the neighborhood.

And as to your attitude toward the faculty, remember this one thing. Don't ever give an excuse for an unprepared lesson on the Monday after a party. It's such a common thing to do. Once, in the Education class I was the fifth to say I'd lost my book. Think of it,—five books gone two days after the Soph. Dance! Then, too, if you had to miss French on account of, Well,—a headache,—remember that you can't be found down at Otto's drinking Coca Colas at three p. m.

But Gerty, I must close. I have literally rambled on for many pages. I know you'll have such a good time down there. Take it all but don't let your head get turned. I must stop now for I hear Ted coming. Dear Old Ted. Some day we're coming back together and see if our initials are still on that tree up the race!

Ever devotedly,

Sarah.

P. S.—Are you saving the 5th of November, Gertrude? Remember, it's the culmination of another college romance.

It Happened in 1910

This is the story of Grodin,
The soreful heathen white
Who came to the Oregon campus
From the land of the Moscovite.
He stopped at the dormitory,
All for learning's dear sweet sake,
And fattened on postie tosties
And hyper-developed steak.
But a crew of heartless freshmen
Broke in on his peaceful rest
With a rah! rah! in the hall way
And a bottle of H2S.

Finally Grodin rushed to the window—
The strong gases spread as he fled—
And shattered his water pitcher
On Sherlock Walls' head.
And thus the investigation
Where the faculty held its nose,
With H2S as exhibit A,
While Grodin proclaimed his woes.
And thus the big house cleaning
When investigations were o'er:
Sherlock Walls must leave in peace
The guy on the second floor.

Oregana "Loving" Cup Contest

A beautiful loving cup was offered on April 1, 1911, by the Oregana, for the most interesting "case" developed in the second semester, between any two university students. The number of applicants practically swamped the secretary, and it was found necessary, in order to facilitate the work for the judges, to separate the contestants into their respective classes of "cases."

Owing to the time of going to press having been earlier than was expected, a few have been unintentionally left out.

Busher Brown, Mique Stastny and Joe Rothschild were disqualified on charges of "professionalism."

like weeds,
The call on all sides is for strife.

It's a call that your father answered,
A call in a different way,
A call for men to battle
But not in the musket's way.

It's a call for well trained soldiers
To battle corruption and greed,
A new replanting the forests
With men of a different seed.

That's what college will give you,—
A broader outlook in life,
A clearer head, a clearer brain,—
Will you come and prepare for the strife?

Oh you wonder and loiter,
Think perhaps it won't pay,
In your veins runs the blood of heroes
long dead,
Who thought in a different way.

They counted not money or dollars,
Simply knew that the nation called
And the tramp of their feet still echoes
Through the long forgotten halls.

Come, we say, come, for we need you;
We cannot be victors alone,
Come, we say, come, and prepare yourself,
Come, show the breed of your bone.

Our country needs men who are trained men,
To build up her cities and mines;
Our country needs workers and toilers
To herald the dawn of the times.

Master Prefer, the college will help you,
It calls to you now,—come to-day.

Not all profs. go to hades when they die,—some of them get married first

Foreword

The buying of a piano is an important matter. There are many pianos and many dealers. You must, in a large degree, rely upon the dealer. He knows piano quality. Sherman, Clay & Co., have been selling pianos on the Pacific Coast for nearly forty years and their selling methods are well known. The following quotation from the Oregon Daily Journal, of August 9, 1908, is significant:

"In almost every line of trade there are one or more firms who, by reason of long years of fair dealing and courteous demeanor have earned the confidence and respect of the public. No firm in any line of trade stands higher than does the house of Sherman, Clay & Co."

Without pretense of giving you something for nothing, and with assurance of fair and courteous treatment always, we solicit your patronage.

Steadily, year by year, the people of the Pacific Northwest have been finding out that there is a place where pianos of sterling quality may be had at fair and honest prices. This fact is clearly shown by the rapid and unprecedented growth of our business. The policy of one price to every one, everywhere, and the fact that Sherman, Clay & Co. never resort to guessing contests, Piano Bond schemes, special fake sales and other false representations calculated to make the public believe that good pianos are being sold for very little money have gained for them the respect and confidence of the public.

U. S. M. Between Father and Son

---

Fish Day, about noon.

Dear Old Dad:—

Well, I'm at your mercy again,—broke and in debt, and I am trusting that you can and will bless me imidjit with another strip of benevolence before they cart me off to the Poor House with the rest of the poor dogs. Oh! Great, Good, Sweet Charity.

Dad, I hope to amount to something, someday,—after I once get a start. I realize that I haven't accomplished a Worth While thing all during life and that I haven't earned enough money to keep me in salt. And, I confess, I don't see any signs of landing any permanent influx within the next few years unless I give up my education and go to teaching school or tackle some other maumpy paumpy caper for which I seem limited by mere process of elimination. But I feel certain that I have the stuff in me and that I shall more than make good eventually. There is one quality that I do claim to have and that is pride and ambition. Mayhap that is the secret of my simmering bank accounts.

The sorority girls up here entertain a lot and if a fellow doesn't return the obligations in some more or less concrete fashion he is dubbed a "tight wad" and is forced to cringe every time he passes anyone. Now I don't throw any money in the gutter and I haven't spent a cent of money on billiards and tobacco like most of the fellows around here do. As for cab hire,—I made the real cracker-jack girl of the whole college paddle through the storm with me the other night to an ultra formal dance at the gym. And I was her guest, too—the girls themselves were paying for the wax and sherbet. It has been my one purpose to strike the happy medium and I truly believe I have, for I can see every day how I am getting a heap more of good out of college than any other fellow up here; and you folks seem to be able to make ends meet there at home.

Where is that sixty dollars, you ask? My house bill went to $30.40 this month because I was fined several times for studying after the lights were supposed to be turned out. Then 10 went for tuition again this semester and 8 for a string of weighty books. You see that doesn't leave much for shoe repairs, postage and stationery, church dues and hair-cuts. I save a mint of money by shaving myself and shining my own shoes when I can find time between study hours. And last week I made a dollar by stinging Jacobs, the town junk, on some old shoes and overcoats that I unearthed in my room-mate's closet. Some of these fellows make me nervous, at times,—they are so untidy about their rooms.

But, father, I'm due to talk before the debating society tonight on the "Value of Abstinence," and reckon I had better brush up on a few minor points before you tire of this. I hope you will see the light and answer my prayer,—unless you endow me soon I fear the bill collector will drive me to the madhouse.

Faithfully and frantically your affectionate son,

WILLIE FRATHOUSE.

As Bill opened this letter a few mornings later he experienced a mixture of sensations:

Tuesday evening.

My Dear William:

Your last letter has been received and I enclose herewith check for $50.

It seems to me that you have been acquiring very extravagant habits down at Eugene. Your personal expenses are certainly much more than my own, and they must be pruned down in some way. If every student in the school had to pay out as much, I'm disposed to think the attendance would be very small.

DAD.

The Dream in the Afterglow

The twilight falls on the distant hills,
The old hall's shadow is dim to the sight;
I puff my cigar with a sigh of content,
And think of those absent to-night;
I think of those once dear to me,
Pals that I used to know,
I wonder, old scouts, are you sitting as I?
Do you dream in the afterglow?

It's no longer the place that we used to
know, pals,
Things seem to have changed somehow;
Undergrads pass me with wondering stare,
Girls pass,—no smile or no bow.
Yet I'm glad, pals, glad that I'm back,
Dreaming of times' long ago.
Gad! how I wish you were here now with me,
To dream in the afterglow.

I've wondered some times, pals, in days long gone by,
Wondered and thought—did it pay?
Why don't you know how we longed to get out,—
Just sort of prayed for the day?
Wonder if those who are passing me now
Just as we did—pray to go?
If they do well, pals, some day they as I,
Will dream in the afterglow.

The Dream of a College Man

8 o'clock

The incense burned, and the smoke curled on,
In the room where the Senior sat,
And he thought of the four happy years he had had,
With his courses of "zo" and of "cat."

9 o'clock

He thought of the fun and the frolics he'd had,
Of the scrapes he'd been called up to face.
Then he thought of the pranks he'd played on the Sophs.,
And how, later, he'd splashed in the race.

10 o'clock

Then the office he saw, with its inmates dread
And he heaved a sorrowful sigh.
Once he counted his credits and tried to make nine,
Then realized it was useless to try.

11 o'clock

But his dreams wander on, to the football field,
And he hears the hoarse cheer of the throng,
As he ran toward the goal in the 5-0 game,
Ye Gods, but Old Kincaid seemed long!

12 o'clock, midnight

Again it is Spring, dear old Oregon Spring,
On the race he is paddling along;
His note books and lectures are farthest away
For the girl in the bow sings a song.

1 o'clock

But it's over, it's past, and the sheepskin is his,
The A. E.'s at last come his way;
Yet still there's his packing, his leaving,
his going,
And still there are bills left to pay.

2 o'clock

The incense went out, and the smoke ceased
to curl,
The Senior woke up from his dream;
His life has begun,—he must labor and toil,
Or go back to the farm and the team.

Didn't You Want To?

Oh, the foxy hasher who passed you by,
Whose cheek was rosey and glance was shy;
And who winked her sparkling, laughing eye
Rising her hobbie just a trifle high,
Say bo, you're but human
Though some sedate,
And the pass to glory is some long wait
Of course you passed on, for so you state,
But say—didn't you want to?
Oh! the blooming freshman in Sid Smith's joint,
Who in pool you could clean by many a point,
Who flashed a roll that would choke a cow,
And offered to play you for money or chow,
The thing was pickings for one such as you,
And if you did—what could any one do?
But you turned around and hied away
Or—well at least that's what you say,
But—didn't you want to?

Oh! the course was hard and you'd boned
all night,
You'd plugged it often till morning's light;
Oh, the Prof. was a snap, as blind as a bat,
And you were sure the nervy old Nat;
And the book at your feet and no one would blab—
T'was as safe as a ride in a handsome cab.
But you were as honest as a Russian scout,
And flunked the course and got kicked
out,
But didn't you want to?
Oh,—you wanted to, yes, and now you go
And claim to be the temptation's foe;
That the tempter has now no hold upon you,
See what the spirit of right will do?
And you sort of feel like a living saint
That's free from sin or any taint.
But honest, now, bo, you know you ain't;
Wait till you want to want to.
