University Awarded Grant to Study Behavior Change Models in Disease Management

< Judith Hibbard, principal investigator

The university will partner with a leading provider of disease management programs on ways to improve health care delivery.

The Health Industry Forum at Brandeis University announced a $190,413 grant to the university and LifeMasters Supported SelfCare to assess whether patient outcomes can be improved by customizing disease management interventions based on unique situations for each patient.

The study's principal investigator is Judith Hibbard, professor of health policy in the department of planning, public policy and management. She will work with LifeMasters to conduct a study using a new assessment tool called the Patient Activation Measure.

Patient activation is the term used by health care professionals to describe an individual's knowledge, skill and confidence for managing their own health. The hypothesis to be tested is that regularly monitoring patient activation and tailoring interventions based on this information, will lead to improvements in patient activation, clinical outcomes and total health care spending.

Hibbard is a member of the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Healthcare's Public Policy Group. She also serves on a number of other advisory panels and commissions, including an advisory panel for United Health Group, the national Advisory Council for the Agency for Health Care Research and Quality, the Quality Forum and the Oregon Patient Safety Commission. She is an investigator on the Consumer Assessment of Health Plans Study II, a research project of the national Agency for Healthcare Research and Quality.

Reminder on Handling Confidential Materials

The university provides a free service to campus departments with regard to the handling confidential materials. Intact documents should be placed in the locked containers provided by Docu-Shred.

Containers are usually placed in all buildings where departmental administration offices are located. Contact your department's office manager for the exact location.

The process is approved by the university as safe and in compliance with state law.

Departments are advised to not do their own shredding since this incurs unnecessary labor and energy costs. Campus Recycling will not accept shredded material.

New Book Offers Evolutionary Analysis of Cultural Behavior

A new work by Douglas Kennett, associate professor of anthropology, examines the earliest colonizers of North America's West Coast.

"The Island Chumash: Behavioral Ecology of a Maritime Society" (University of California Press Berkeley, 2005), details the lives of the Chumash people of the Northern Channel Islands of California.

The book is lauded by scholars as an unprecedented reading of culture change during a prehistoric period and a model for the application of the principles of human behavioral ecology to prehistory.

Colonized as early as 13,500 years ago, California's Northern Channel Islands offer some of the earliest evidence of human habitation along the American West Coast. Kennett provides an insight into the cultural evolutionary history of these people. He shows that the social and political complexity evident among the Chumash was a product of individual responses to demographic expansion, human impact on marine habitats and periods of rapid climatic change.

"I would rank Doug Kennett's work as the most important study to come out of the Chumash area, and one of the best examples of research on culture change in contemporary archaeology," said L. Mark Raab, co-editor of "Prehistoric California" (University of Utah Press, 2005) and director of the Center of Public Archaeology at California State University, Northridge.

Kennett is currently researching the transition to agriculture and the emergence of states in ancient Mesoamerica. His new book on the subject, "Behavioral Ecology and the Transition to Agriculture" (University of California Press Berkeley, 2006), will be published in January.

He led a joint field program last summer that included Oregon students at the ancient Maya village of San Estevan in northern Belize, and plans to return again next summer with university students to continue the work.

History Professor Captures Oregon Book Award Prize

< Award-winning author James Mohr

James Mohr's book, "Plague and Fire: Battling Black Death and the 1900 Burning of Honolulu's Chinatown" (Oxford University Press, 2004), won the Frances Fuller Victor Award as the the top work in the history category at the Oregon Book Awards Nov. 11 in Portland.

This is the history professor's account of the story behind the burning of Honolulu's Chinatown during the bubonic plague epidemic of 1900. Mohr's interest was sparked when he spotted a simple sign while walking in Honolulu's modern Chinatown. It said the original buildings in the area had all been burned "on order of the Board of Health," Mohr recalled, "and I wondered how such a thing could have happened."

Mohr specializes in 19th century social and medical policy. He currently teaches courses on American identity, 19th century U.S. history, the Civil War and Reconstruction. He has been a Guggenheim Fellow, a Rockefeller-Ford Fellow, an National Endowment for the Humanities Fellow, a Norman Brown Fellow, and winner of the Throne-Aldrich Prize.

In addition to his latest award-winning book, Mohr's previous major publications include "Doctors and the Law: Medical Jurisprudence in Nineteenth-Century America" (Oxford University Press, 1993, Johns Hopkins University Press, 1996) and "The Cormany Diaries: A Northern Family in the Civil War" (University of Pittsburgh Press, 1982, 1990), among others.

Faculty Invited to Submit FIG and Freshmen Seminar Proposals

The university's First-Year Programs invites faculty members to submit proposals for freshman seminars and freshman interest groups (FIGs) for the 2006-7 academic year. FIG proposals are due Jan. 9 and seminar proposals are due Jan. 16.

FIGs offer an opportunity to develop a close working and advising relationship with first-year students who wish to achieve extraordinary academic success while at the university.

FIG instructors teach a one-credit college connections seminar during the fall term to a group of 25 students, who are co-enrolled in two lecture classes. The seminar is intended to explore related themes between the two classes and to connect freshmen to campus resources.

Out-of-class activities, both social and academic, are particularly encouraged. Andrew Marcus, professor of geography, took his current FIG students in environmental studies on a camping trip to the Olympia National Park in Washington, where they observed and studied the Elwha Dam project.

Freshman seminars are small, interactive courses designed to introduce first-year students to thought-provoking, challenging, and stimulating subjects. These three-credit seminars give freshmen a focused academic experience in an area of special interest to the faculty member. Topics range from African history expressed through dance, to the myths of American roots music, to debunking myths of nutrition quackery. The program offers 10 seminars each term.

Students Win ROTC Honors

Seniors Leah Orlowski and Robi Gross have been named by the U.S. Army Cadet Command as Distinguished Military Graduates, an honor that places them in the top 20 percent of ROTC cadets across the nation. The selection is based on their excellent grades and demonstrated leadership potential.

Orlowski will graduate in June with a degree in sociology, and plans to serve in the military police branch of the U.S. Army. She will be commissioned as a second lieutenant.

"A long term goal is to eventually enter into law enforcement and direct my attentions to local community outreach programs for battered women and abused children," Orlowski said.

Gross, who graduates in June with degrees in psychology and religious studies, hopes to continue graduate studies at the University of Washington and earn a master's degree in social work. She then plans to get a law degree at the University of Michigan.

"Eventually, I'll come back home to Oregon and live here permanently," Gross said.

With the release of the National Order of Merit List, the Department of Military Science reported that of 13 Oregon students considered, four placed in the top 36 percent of the 3,838 graduating ROTC cadets across the nation.

In January 1916, University of Oregon President Prince Lucien Campbell established an ROTC curriculum. More than 100 students participated in the first drill in March 1916, led by officers from the Oregon National Guard. By the fall term 1916, ROTC became compulsory for all male freshmen and sophomores. On Jan. 27, 1919, ROTC was officially established at the university. ROTC became voluntary in 1962.

The long tradition of ROTC at Oregon has produced the highest number of general officers of all non-military ROTC schools nationwide. A total of 45 flag officers are Oregon graduates.

Gift Will Help Publicize Insight Seminars

A $10,000 gift from Russ and Blyth Carpenter will be used to publicize the university's Insight Seminars. The gift was announced Nov. 11.

The Insight Seminars will begin a third season in January and are for adults who want to re-immense themselves in university life without focusing on grades. This year's six seminars will examine the wisdom traditions of the ancient world and their relevance in America today.

Carpenter and James Earl, professor of English, conceived of the seminars many years ago as a way of providing adult non-students with the same sort of learning experience as a university course, with real study and deep learning. Carpenter said that he, Earl and others provided "enough passion, collaboration and cooperation" to eventually make the seminars a reality.

"Anyone can dabble in humanities such as philosophy, literature, history, religion, art, and music without a university; but there's no comparison between random reading and the sort of experience a real university provides," said Earl.

Carpenter is pleased that his gift will be used to help promote the Insight Seminars. "With the anticipated explosion of baby boomer retirees, this is an important time to publicize the program. The Insight Seminars could be important to people as they transition from working to making a new life," he said.

The series begins in January with an introductory meeting in December. Each seminar costs $90 and includes four meetings held on Saturday mornings at the Jordan Schnitzer Museum of Art, 1430 Johnson Lane. A discount is offered to those who register for all six seminars.

Museum Presents Winter Solstice Celebration

The Museum of Natural and Cultural History presents a winter solstice celebration from 5:30 to 7:30 p.m. on Friday, Dec. 16.

Activities and performances will take place at the museum, 1680 E. 15th Ave., and at the nearby University of Oregon Many Nations Longhouse, 1630 Columbia St.

Admission is $3 per person and $5 for families (two adults and up to four youths). Museum members and children under 10 are admitted free. All proceeds benefit the museum's public education programs.

A variety of family-based activities will take place. Children can have their faces painted with the sun or other winter themes, create and decorate solstice masks, and make colorful sun catchers and snowflakes. Eugene photographer John Flinn will present a slide show featuring photographs of aurora borealis and other celestial imagery.

There will be a lighted path from the museum to the longhouse for participants to enjoy 5:30 and 6:30 p.m. performances by Asian fan dancers and Eugene storyteller Paulette Ansari, who will share African and African-American stories and folktales.

The winter solstice marks the shortest day of the year and is the time when the sun is farthest south in the northern hemisphere.

Live, Call-In Program on Financial Aid for College Airs Dec. 13 on OPB

For parents, teachers and the college-bound, Oregon Public Broadcasting (OPB) presents "Financial Aid for College," at 8 p.m. on Dec. 13 to help parents and students learn more about ways to pay for college education.

The program will offer helpful tips on paying for a college education and will name resources available to new students.

Hosted by OPB's Steve Amen, the program features financial aid experts who will provide loan and grant information and offer advice on the college application process. The program includes short video segments of real-life financial aid success stories. Viewers will be encouraged to have a pen and paper handy to jot down useful information. The show targets families of all economic backgrounds and students of all ages.

During the broadcast, toll-free phone lines will be open for viewers to call counselors who can answer questions in English or Spanish.

The program will be broadcast again at 11 a.m. on Sunday, Dec. 18.

Free Personal Health
Screenings, Workshops
Available to Staff
Dec. 1-2

As part of the university's participation in the Healthy Worksite Initiative, the Public Employee Benefits Board (PEBB) and Oregon's Department of Health Services offer free personal health screenings.

The screenings will be conducted on campus from 8 a.m. to noon, Dec. 1 and 2, in the Erb Memorial Union's (EMU) Oak and Maple Rooms. Participants will receive their glucose, cholesterol and body mass index numbers and have an opportunity to discuss the information with a nurse practitioner or health educator.

To register, call the PEBB Health Center at 1-800-701-1333.

Two free, state-of-your-health workshops also will take place from noon to 1 p.m., Dec. 1 and 2. The Dec. 1 topic is "The Eight F's Essential for Optimal Health and Wellness," that will take place in the EMU's Bin Linder Room, and the Dec. 2 topic is "Know Your Numbers" that will be in the EMU's Fir Room. Participants should bring their own lunch.

Confidential Recycling: What You Need to Know

1. It's the Law. The University is required to protect the privacy of all students and employees. Under Oregon State Law the University must safely destroy confidential materials (OAR #166-030-060 (2)).
2. You and your Department must comply. The University has contracted with Docu-Shred for pick-up, shredding, and pulping of all confidential materials. It is very important that every department and employee of the University is in compliance with the law, or you could be held personally liable.
3. If you do it yourself, you pay for it yourself. Pre-shredding of confidential materials is permissible under state law. However, should you choose this option, please be advised that your Department must pay the cost of pickup. The secured unshredded materials program is the University's preferred and cost-effective solution.
4. The Archives is responsible for all official university records. The University Records Manager can answer questions about confidential records and related Oregon laws. Archives is part of the Library, which administers the University's Confidential Recycling contract. Note that the Library cannot store, move, or otherwise handle these materials, but can answer questions about the contract.

Who to Call:

- To request pickup or a lockable security cart: Docu-Shred 503-223-9770 X210 (Robert Kehoe) or robert.kehoe@ironmountain.com New contact!
- For more information on Docu-Shred services: www.docu-shred.com
- Questions on Confidential Records and the OAR: Erin O'Meara, University Records Manager, 346-1905

What the contract covers:

Pick up, shredding, and pulping of confidential materials as required by Oregon State Law. Materials are maintained in secure conditions until they are pulped. Unlike shredded materials, pulped documents cannot be reassembled.

What the contract does not cover, and thus your Department must pay for itself:

- Pickup of pre-shredded confidential material

- > Billing for pick up and destruction will be invoiced to the department of origin
- > For pre-shredded materials there is a $40 per trip minimum.

Departmental responsibilities prior to the pick up of Confidential Recycling:

- Designate a member of the department to be the official liaison and contact person for confidential recycling.
- Keep materials in a locked toter, or place the unlocked toter or boxes in a locked room or closet.
- Provide access for Docu-Shred to the locked storage area so that the materials can be picked up. Docu-Shred will be on campus only on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Thursdays. Departments must call Docu-Shred in advance for a pick up on those days
- Arrange for pickup only when accumulation of Confidential Recycling materials reaches two (2) full 64 gallon carts, or a minimum of sixteen (16) full boxes of material. (A box is equivalent to those that hold copier paper.) If your Department produces very little confidential materials, work with other departments in your building to coordinate collection and/or pick up of materials.

What participating faculty members have said about our programs:

"It was one of the most rewarding pedagogical experiences of my career. The student response was incredibly enthusiastic, and I believe my department picked up a number of new majors as a result. It was such a pleasure to see the positive impact that the course has had on the development of the critical thinking and writing skills of first-year students.

—Steven Brown, Freshman Seminars professor

"The encouragement we receive as faculty members to develop an innovative concept for a class, and the funding the department receives on an in-load basis, were the MAIN REASONS I developed this class. The concept had been in the back of my mind, but it wasn't until I saw the Call for Proposals that I thought I could pull it off."

—Renee Irvin, Freshman Seminars professor

"Overall, a great program. I believe the cohort system really offers a nice bridge from high school to college, and the College Connections course gives them the structured resources to be successful and to support them through their self-doubts in fall term, freshmen year."

–James Chang, FIG College Connections professor

"I enjoyed working with the students. One of the main reasons I left the performing (full time) life for academia was to make a difference with students. This seminar helped me to do that."

–Mike Grose, FIG College Connections professor

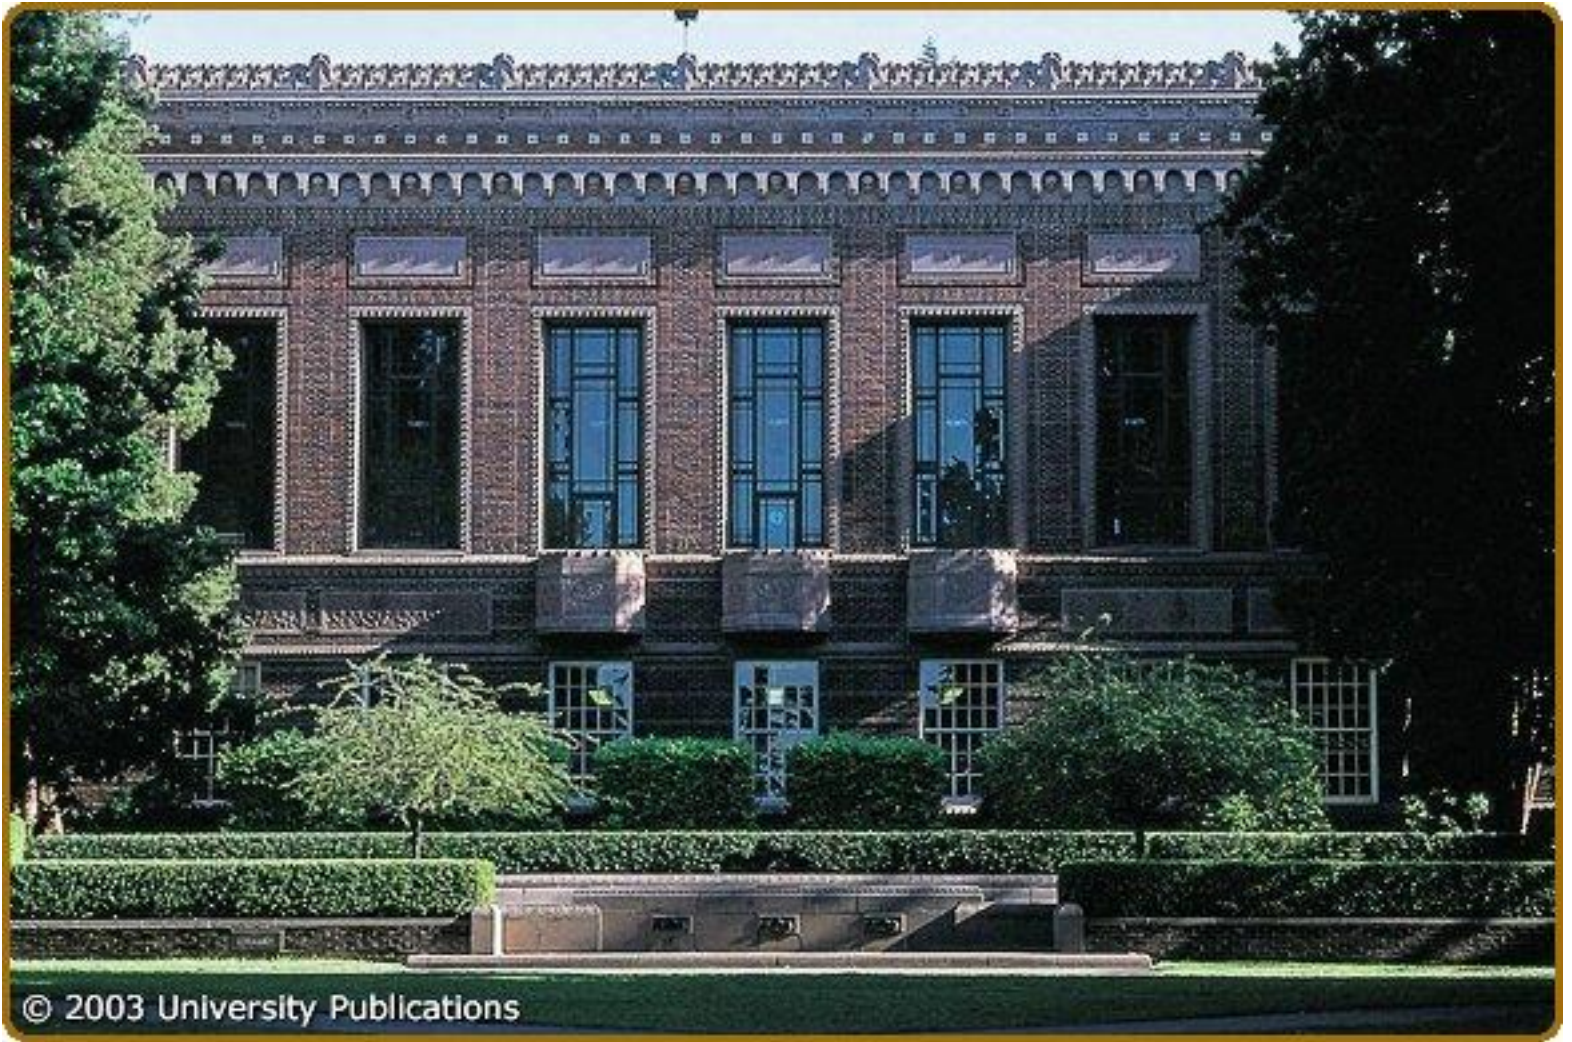

"I think the Connections classes are great and have tremendous potential. I enjoyed teaching this year and continuing to understand what issues the first year students grapple with."

–Diane Baxter, FIG College Connections professor

The Healthy Worksite Initiative

The University of Oregon has joined a pilot program sponsored by PEBB and DHS Public Health for the academic year 2005-2006. This important initiative is designed to improve employee overall health and reduce risks for developing ongoing health conditions.

Over the coming months, employees will have the opportunity to participate in on-site health screenings and classes, promotional activities to increase daily physical activity, and other ongoing opportunities that encourage healthy choices.

As a participating organization, we are committed to assessing the wellness program and evaluating our progress over time. Please complete this short, web-based survey. The information is confidential and will be provided anonymously. The responses will be used to evaluate the success of our efforts. Paper surveys are available by calling Human Resources at 346-3159. Please return paper surveys to Human Resources.

Historian Chronicles Burning of Honolulu's Chinatown

A new book by University of Oregon History Professor James Mohr is the first in-depth account of the epic story behind the burning of Honolulu's Chinatown during the bubonic plague epidemic of 1900.

Plague and Fire: Battling Black Death and the 1900 Burning of Honolulu's Chinatown (Oxford University Press, 2004) represents completion of a 20-year project that was sparked when Mohr spotted a simple sign while walking in Honolulu's modern Chinatown. It said the original buildings in the area had all been burned "on order of the Board of Health," Mohr recalled, "and I wondered how such a thing could have happened."

As the story opens, the United States had just annexed Hawaii, but had not yet set up a territorial government. A worldwide epidemic of the legendary Black Death had already swept through India and China, where it had killed millions, and arrived in Honolulu in December 1899. The white minority government quickly ceded absolute emergency powers to the local Board of Health, which was charged with saving the islands from decimation.

"I've always been interested in cases where doctors are prominently involved in the making of public policy," said Mohr, an authority on medical jurisprudence. "Here was a case in which three physicians were essentially the absolute dictators of America's newest territorial possession. The fact that the U.S. didn't know quite what to do with its new possession was one of the complicating factors in the medical politics of the whole thing."

The crisis unfolded as the public health community debated the virtues of bacteriology. Unfortunately, the vector of the epidemic – fleas – had not yet been demonstrated.

"They could identify the enemy but they weren't sure how to kill the enemy," Mohr explained. "That's why they resorted to the use of fire for site burning where plague victims had died – fire was the only thing they knew for certain that would destroy any lingering bacteria. One of those fires became an inferno and in a matter of hours destroyed about a fifth of the city."

Amazingly, no lives were lost in the fire. But some 6,000 who fled were incarcerated in quarantine camps and held under armed guard because their probable exposure to the plague risked spreading it across the city.

"James Mohr gives a riveting account of why, how and with what consequences physician leaders in Hawaii a century ago assumed emergency health powers," said Daniel M. Fox, president of the Milbank Memorial Fund, an endowed national foundation that supports nonpartisan analysis, study, and research on significant issues in health policy.

Mohr specializes in 19th century social and medical policy. He currently teaches courses on American identity, 19th century U.S. history, the Civil War and Reconstruction. He has been a Guggenheim Fellow, a Rockefeller-Ford Fellow, an National Endowment for the Humanities Fellow, a Norman Brown Fellow, and winner of the Throne-Aldrich Prize.
