ELLIS F. LAWRENCE BIOGRAPHY AND SIGNIFICANCE

"Harmony in Diversity" was a favorite phrase of Ellis F. Lawrence, and it was his goal in life and work. He said that "to bring harmony out of this most complex and involved civilization of ours, is certainly the outstanding challenge of this generation"¹. His accomplishments in responding to this challenge make him the most significant Oregon architect of his time. These accomplishments include the buildings and organizations which he created, the work of the architects whom he trained, and his personal example of a life dedicated to art and public service.

EARLY YEARS

He was born in a suburb of Boston, Malden, Massachusetts, on November 13, 1879. His father, Henry Abbott Lawrence, manufactured artists' and engineers' supplies and ran a Boston artists' materials store named Frost and Adams Company. Ellis would later write that his father opened the door to architecture for him, but his "earliest ambition was to be a portrait painter, for the human face fascinated me. In my teens I would often follow a face to the end of the car line trying secretly to sketch it."² "I remember vividly my discovery that physical loveliness sometimes masked the devil and that what I then thought gaunt homeliness sometimes hid the angel. So I early began to change my standards...Ugliness now often becomes exquisite beauty...Architecture became to me something more than sticks and stone because of my love of faces. It never seemed as important as the people who were to live, work, or worship in the buildings I designed."³

The Lawrence family was sufficiently affluent to send Ellis to Phillips Academy in Andover, Massachusetts, and to continue his education at Boston Tech, even after Ellis' father was killed in a train accident when Ellis was sixteen. In 1902 Ellis received his Masters degree in architecture from Boston Tech (now Massachusetts Institute of Technology), the first school of architecture in this country. He was president of his senior class. At night in the drafting room he was the "champion drafting stool racer;" later, when he was a teacher, he would write of his students that "I have always been afraid this present crop would sometime discover the possibilities in that rare but noisy sport."⁴ One of his classmates described him as genial, high principled, cultured, and sane, adding that "only his friends knew the breadth of his striving."⁵

Constant Désiré Despraedelle, his French Beaux Arts studio instructor at MIT, was one of three men who most influenced Lawrence during his years of education and apprenticeship in New England.⁶ Lawrence worked for his firm, Codman and Despraedelle, for three years after MIT, and he said that Despraedelle taught him about functionalism and "how to drink deeply of the joy of work."⁷ Lawrence kept a picture of him over his desk throughout his life.

Lawrence also briefly worked in New England for architects Andrews, Jacques & Rantoul; Peabody & Stearns; and John Calvin Stevens--the second of the three men who influenced Lawrence's early years. Stevens' romantic interpretations of colonial buildings influenced Lawrence's designs, and his office became Lawrence's standard for a spirit of cooperation in work. "Stevens made me desire...the same devotion and loyalty and co-operation from my men as he received from his...He taught me to detest the architect who buys the brains of a draughtsman to create what he himself as architect should create and then parade it before the eyes of the world...saying...'I did it'."8

The third of the three men who influenced Lawrence was Charles F. Kimball, a landscape painter from whom Lawrence learned an economy of manner and means and the value of art that is uncontaminated by commercialism.

In 1905 Lawrence traveled in England, France, and Italy for eight months during which he was married at St. John's Chapel in Chester, England, to Alice Millett of Portland, Maine. He affiliated for five months with the Paris Atelier of Eugene A. Duquesne, a private studio not part of the Ecole de Beaux Arts. Architects Raymond Hood and George Ford shared his Rue de Seine quarters.⁹ Years later, Lawrence advised student travelers that "France and England are splendid, but when it comes to real meat Italy beats them both."¹⁰ "Don't spend too much time at the centers but get out into the country."¹¹

OREGON

Lawrence arrived in Portland, Oregon, in March 1906 on his way to open an architectural office in San Francisco for Stephen Codman. The great San Francisco earthquake struck the following month, and Lawrence liked Portland, so he stayed where he was. He worked briefly for architect Edgar M. Lazarus, then in November 1906, joined another Lazarus employee--MIT classmate, E.B. MacNaughton, and engineer Henry Raymond in the partnership of MacNaughton, Raymond and Lawrence. Lawrence was their chief designer.

In 1910, Lawrence wrote that "the West is the place for me," but he cautioned that young architects "should not come West too soon, and should fully appreciate what a real architect is. It is an easy thing here with the lure of easy speculation to forget anything but the making of money. This I think is the only reason why from my point of view the combination we had at [MacNaughton, Raymond and Lawrence]...was not really successful."¹²

Lawrence left that partnership in February 1910 and practiced independently for three years before associating with another classmate from MIT, his friend William Holford. Later, in 1928, long-time employees Ormond Bean and Fred Allyn joined them as partners. Bean left the firm in 1933 after being elected city commissioner and began a distinguished career in public service. Still later, during World War II, Lawrence practiced independently, and then began a partnership with his son and long-time associate, H. Abbott Lawrence. Lawrence's office designed hundreds of buildings during these years. Individual roles within the firm are not entirely clear today; but it appears that Lawrence was usually the chief designer, conceiving the basic scheme, then working with others to develop it, and often designing the ornamental embellishment himself.

IN HIS SPARE TIME

Soon after deciding to stay in Portland, Lawrence designed the northeast Portland house in which he lived for the rest of his life. It may be the earliest Arts and Crafts style house in Oregon. It is also a duplex; Lawrence and his wife and three children lived on one side, and his mother and sister lived on the other. In 1907, he purchased a forty acre apple ranch in Odell near Hood River, where he built a second house in which his family spent occasional weekends and portions of the summers until he sold the ranch in 1924. Lawrence painted there, sketched his three small boys, and worked in his apple orchards. His apples won the "Sweepstakes" at the 1910 Oregon State Horticultural Show.

The Oregon coast became Lawrence's other leisure-time destination. In the early years he went to Neahakahni, where he had built the Neahakahni Tavern, and where a summer arts colony was forming. In later years he preferred Purdy's cottages, just south of Yachats, where he sketched, read, dressed "in very disreputable clothes...much like a tramp,"¹³ and hunted for agates on the beach. He said that the finding of the agates must not become more important than the stimulation of the hunt.¹⁴ He never got the cottage by the sea that he always wanted.

His other spare time activities included an occasional tennis match or fishing, and listening to classical music. He disliked jazz and boogie-woogie. He abandoned the banjo he had played while at Andover and returned to playing the violin, which he described as "fiddling...awfully."¹⁵ He enjoyed good cigars and good food and wasn't very fond of physical exercise; not surprisingly, he was somewhat overweight.

In his early years in Oregon, he founded organizations that became the foundation for professionalism in the building industry of Oregon and the West.

THE PORTLAND ARCHITECTURAL CLUB

The Portland Architectural Club was founded in May 1906, two months after Lawrence's arrival in Portland, with MacNaughton as its first President. Lawrence was active in its educational efforts, and was chairman of the January 1908 First Exhibit that was Oregon's first major display of architectural drawings and allied arts. For two years he taught a night class for carpenters at the YMCA, and in 1909 the PAC elected him to begin a Portland design studio affiliated with the Beaux Arts Society. This atelier, with Lawrence as its patron, offered Oregon's first formal classes for would-be architects. His early students included his future partner, Fred S. Allyn, and Louis C. Rosenberg, whom Lawrence hired as the first instructor of architecture at the University of Oregon and who later became a famous artist. In 1910 Lawrence was elected president of the Portland Architectural Club.

THE ARCHITECTURAL LEAGUE OF THE PACIFIC COAST

In 1909, Lawrence organized and chaired the first convention ever held of West Coast architects. This convention approved his proposal to create an association of architectural clubs and American Institute of Architects' chapters in the Western states to be called The Architectural League of the Pacific Coast. Lawrence was its acknowledged founder and first vice-president. Architect Willis Polk, the League's first president, described Lawrence as "a 'steam roller' for work. I never saw a man who works so industriously, so enthusiastically, so continuously."¹⁶ Member organizations quickly grew to a dozen, and Lawrence became their third president in 1912. The League held exhibits, promoted student training, and held conventions in San Francisco, Los Angeles, Seattle, and Portland. Lawrence believed that the League was better able than the AIA to meet the unique educational needs of the profession and its clientel in the West; but the AIA's influence grew in the West, and the League was abandoned in 1915. Lawrence regretted this, noting especially that students were included in the League but not in the AIA.¹⁷

OREGON CHAPTER OF THE AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF ARCHITECTS

Lawrence did see a role for the AIA in raising professional standards in the West, and in 1910 he attempted to organize a local chapter, noting that this was difficult "because the oldest practitioners in town...care little or nothing for its principles."¹⁸ He was chairman of the founding group which established The Oregon Chapter of the AIA in November 1911 and was elected the chapter's first president. Reform of unfair competition practices was high among his priorities; and in 1911, he became professional adviser to the Portland Auditorium Competition, the first Oregon competition to use the AIA's rules. In 1913, he became the second Oregon architect to be named a Fellow in the national AIA. In 1919, he was influential in the adoption of the Oregon Architect's Registration Law, one of the first in the West. In later years he was a national director and vice-president of the AIA.

THE BUILDERS EXCHANGE

Having organized the architects, Lawrence next turned his attention to the entire building industry, founding The Builders Exchange of Portland in 1911 and the Oregon Building Congress in 1921. While president of The Portland Architectural Club, he and architect Joseph Jacobberger invited responsible contractors and builders to join with the architects in founding The Builders Exchange to promote cooperation and to encourage and protect the building interests of Portland. Their large downtown offices included meeting rooms, plan-check rooms, a library, and social spaces. In their offices today is a bronze bas relief of Lawrence, "Founder, Builders Exchange Cooperative".

THE OREGON BUILDING CONGRESS

In November 1921, Lawrence presided at the organization of the Association of Building and Construction, later renamed The Oregon Building Congress. This "round table" of architects, contractors, craftsmen, material suppliers, realtors, builders, plus representatives of the public appointed by the governor, followed similar chapters in Boston and New York as part of a growing national congress movement. During the Great Depression, local chapters were founded in many Oregon cities, and the organization existed into World War II. Lawrence described some of the problems it was initially intended to address: "Skilled manpower in the building trades had come from Europe for the most part. When the war and later restrictive immigration laws stopped this flow, incompetent and unskilled labor resulted. Few sons of the mechanic class were entering the trades...No successful apprenticeship system existed...Strikes were frequent...The general contractor had become a broker...The architects and engineers were...not strongly enough entrenched to adjust alone the evils of competitive bidding exploitation, high costs and low standards of execution."¹⁹

Lawrence was president during the first three years of the Building Congress, during which it approved the Code of Ethics for the Building Industry, drafted legislation for an Oregon arbitration court, and established an apprenticeship school and the Guild of Craftsmen. Lawrence was especially proud of the Guild, a concept of architect Charles James, which honored selected craftsmen by naming them Master Guildsmen for exceptional ability in a craft. Lawrence believed that the Guild helped to promote the craftsmanship needed to provide modern buildings with "something of the spirit of man in their finished structure."²⁰ The Guild was praised by Herbert Hoover and Franklin Roosevelt, and guilds based upon it were begun in New York and Philadelphia. The apprenticeship program was also influential nationally, and Lawrence was proud of the success that his "round table" discussions had had in settling labor disputes. He considered his work with the Oregon Building Congress to be the greatest undertaking of his life.²¹

THE CITY PLANNER

Lawrence has been called "The Father of City Planning in Oregon."²² He spoke out against unbridled real estate development and corrupt government, and for a healthier and more attractive city: "The City is an organism, and it must be healthy, else it breeds vice and disease. Above all, its breathing spaces, its parks, must be ample else its lungs will be stifled."²³ Lawrence was a member of the 1909 Civic Improvement League of Portland and the mayor's 1911 Greater Portland Plan Association that commissioned Edward H. Bennett of Chicago to prepare a Portland Plan. Lawrence later described himself as Bennett's "right-hand man"²⁴ in development of the plan, said to be the first in the country to be approved by voters. The elaborate plan accomplished little, but Lawrence continued to serve on various planning commissions and was instrumental in development of plans for the Portland waterfront. Later his planning efforts became more regional, and he promoted the "New Northwest Passage" to canalize the Columbia and Snake Rivers. When he was asked to form a school of architecture at the University of Oregon, he placed the teaching of city planning near the top of his priorities

THE UNIVERSITY OF OREGON

Lawrence's association with the University of Oregon began in 1914, first as campus planner, then as founder and head of the school of architecture, and then in 1915 as university architect. He held these roles until his death in 1946, routinely traveling by train from his practice in Portland to Eugene on Tuesday, spending two nights at the Hotel Osburn--at the Collier House after 1942, and returning by train to Portland on Thursday. He never learned to drive an automobile.

His exclusive commission to design all of the campus buildings as long as he headed the architecture program was intended to compensate for an inadequate teaching salary; and Lawrence justified this arrangement as necessary to protect the school of architecture from a seeming lack of confidence were the University to go elsewhere for the design of its own buildings. Some architects resented this exclusive contract, and it was challenged by Edgar Lazarus and others, especially when Lawrence interpreted the agreement to include the University's medical campus in Portland. The legality of Lawrence's combined academic and professional roles for the university was upheld in a 1938 Oregon Attorney-General's opinion²⁵.

THE SCHOOL OF ARCHITECTURE AND ALLIED ARTS

Lawrence was the founder of The School of Architecture and Allied Arts in 1914, and its head for nearly 32 years. Under Lawrence the school rose to the national prominence which it still enjoys today. Allen Eaton, a Eugene artist/craftsman who said that he had never seen a school of architecture, first suggested the idea of the School to President P.L. Campbell. Eaton also suggested Lawrence, whose exhibit for The Portland Architectural Club he had admired, to head the School. Lawrence welcomed this opportunity to bring art education to Oregonians, whom he described as "typical western Americans, knowing and caring little about aesthetics at this stage of their community life."²⁶

Some architecture coursework had previously been offered at western colleges, including classes in rural architecture at Oregon Agricultural College, but Lawrence's architecture program was only the second complete academic program in architecture to be established west of the Mississippi. In 1919, it became the 13th program accepted to membership in the Association of Collegiate Schools of Architecture. Among the early faculty hired by Lawrence was Alfred Schroff, a painter and stained glass artist, to whom Lawrence wrote that "the little refinements of life...are somewhat lacking...[but] I think you would be contented in the very fight which the work involves."²⁷ Roswell Dosch, a sculptor who had studied under Rodin, was hired to teach the first sculpture classes offered in the Northwest.

Lawrence adapted his architecture program from MIT's, but attempted from the beginning to make it a "genuine experiment in art education."²⁸ He originated three historically significant features. First, was his academic program's integration with building construction at the University. Second, was his inclusion of allied arts along with architecture. Third, was his adoption after a few years, of non-competitive design policies, and a break from the Beaux Arts system. Historian Arthur Weatherhead wrote that these second and third features made Oregon "the first school in the United States to adopt, completely and successfully, these two basic elements of the modern movement in architectural education."²⁹

INTEGRATION WITH THE UNIVERSITY'S BUILDING PROGRAM. Lawrence integrated his academic program with the University's building program to a degree that he reported as unique among architecture schools.³⁰ This relationship was especially evident during a period of active building from 1919 to 1923 during which the University acted as its own general contractor; the University's chief of construction and mechanical inspector were part-time faculty of the school, and classes in construction and working drawings paralleled the building program. Evening classes for the workmen who were actually constructing the buildings brought the students and workers together to discuss each other's work. The students even held "smoker" social events for these workers, with music, wrestling, beans, hot dogs, and cider.³¹ The faculty and students also produced works of art to ornament the campus buildings.

COLLABORATION WITH THE ALLIED ARTS. Encouraged by Allen Eaton and President Campbell, Lawrence decided to teach architecture in close collaboration with the teaching of the arts allied with it. This may seem to be merely a logical result of his training in the elaborately ornamented buildings of the Beaux Arts; but Lawrence said that this training too often made the architect indifferent to the arts "as he...does not care for final results as he does for his presentation and paper design."³² Significantly, of American architecture schools, only Carnegie Tech was organized around this combination; and "Oregon was the first to establish a positive program of collaboration."³³ Lawrence's early thinking about the scope of this art training included weaving, textiles, pottery, tile, terra cotta, modeling and carving, interior decoration, and landscape decoration. Once these were established, he wanted to add book-binding, leather working, needlework, jewelry, costume design, decorative design, illustration, painting, and commercial design.³⁴ Eventually, most of these were established, though after Lawrence's death the arts became more "fine" and less "applied".

THE BEAUX ARTS SYSTEM. The Beaux Arts Institute of Design controlled the highly competitive design programs at all American architectural schools until Oregon became the first in the nation to reject their programs. The eastern schools all followed Oregon's example more than a decade later. Architect/critic William Purcell described the revolt against the Beaux Arts with historic sweep, noting that the contributions of famous architects Viollet le Duc, Joseph Paxton, and Louis Sullivan were well known, "but what is not known are the details of the contribution that Ellis F. Lawrence made."³⁵ Because the school's abandonment of the Beaux Arts system and of competition in design coincided with the arrival in the Fall of 1922 of Professor W.R.B. Willcox, it is often assumed that Willcox was more responsible for this development than was Lawrence. The arrival of Willcox, whose views on education Lawrence knew well, is better interpreted as a conscious move by Lawrence to implement an important step in the evolution of the School.

Lawrence's initial conformance with the Beaux Arts system was part of his plan to start "along pretty safe lines"³⁶ to avoid antagonizing the eastern schools and influential Portland architects such as A.E. Doyle who believed that Beaux Arts training was "fundamentally right."³⁷ The Architectural League of the Pacific Coast had also passed a resolution in 1913 affirming their support for the Beaux Arts system. Lawrence worried that if his men were "given the wrong start, they become the outcasts so many of us are."³⁸ In 1916, he wrote that "the Beaux Arts Society...is full of faults [but] it will probably ultimately be the best medium through which to work,"³⁹ adding in 1918 that the Beaux Arts system was being followed "on the grounds that it offers our best contact point with the East."⁴⁰ His attitudes were evolving: "At first I felt competition was the very essence of success but...are we justified to make a sudden change in methods? I hope to go gradually at a reorganization...That does not mean however that I am altogether a radical against the Beaux Arts Institute of Design. I [would] rather correct its system, than to destroy it."⁴¹ Eventually however he merely ignored it. His move away from the Beaux Arts System accelerated after the School achieved some security by its acceptance to membership in the Association of Collegiate Schools of Architecture in April 1919. The 1919-20 University Catalog noted for the first time that the time spent on Beaux Arts programs was much less than called for by the Beaux Arts Society, and in an April 1920 article, Lawrence wrote that "the usual academic problems...have been largely supplanted by practical problems given under much the same conditions as exist in general architectural practice...[including] specific conditions of site."⁴² The stage was set for Willcox, who soon joined Lawrence in severing the final ties to the Beaux Arts.

Purcell, who knew both Lawrence and Willcox well, credited Lawrence with the rejection of the Beaux Arts programs "with an assist by Prof. Walter Willcox"⁴³. Significantly, Lawrence himself credited Professor Avarð Fairbanks, not Willcox, as "the dominant factor in doing away with competition in design."⁴⁴

Purcell believed that Oregon's remoteness from the East was the principal reason for Lawrence and Willcox's success, but he still considered their action to be courageous, stating that the ruthless leaders of the architectural profession at that time did not hesitate to destroy anyone who opposed them.

TEACHING AND LEARNING. Facilities were meager in the early years of the School; and Lawrence loaned freely from his own architectural library, noting that "the McKim prints have suffered considerably from constant handling."⁴⁵ After his first year of teaching, Lawrence wrote that "When I think of my short-comings in scholarship, I question my ability to cope with the situation at the University; but...I can at least...hammer home to the men under me the necessity of a high sense of ethics and an appreciation of the architects' function."⁴⁶ The following Spring he commented: "I am enjoying life more than I can tell you in my connection with the University youngsters...I find a keen enjoyment in attempting to analyze my chaotic feelings in architectural design...P.S. Have you ever etched? I made my first plate the other night--great sport."⁴⁷

He developed a close paternal relationship with his students, especially in the early years before Willcox largely assumed this role. Lawrence taught design, architectural history, and professional practice matters. His approach to the teaching of architecture grew largely from his emphasis upon social concerns. He wrote that "architecture is after all social service...to be alive, it must be of the present."⁴⁸ From this central emphasis grew the School's specific emphases upon local conditions, construction, craftsmanship, and the rejection of the academic formalism of the Beaux Arts. This modern approach appealed to a famous visitor to the School in 1918, Victor Horta, the Belgian Art Nouveau architect. Lawrence wrote that "he is a modernist and our ideals seem to appeal to him, for he showed plainly that he would like to associate himself with us during his [WWI] exile."⁴⁹

IDEALISM VS. THE REAL WORLD

Lawrence's idealistic nature found a more comfortable home in the University than it had in the Portland architectural profession. He had angered some Portland architects by his criticism, such as his public 1908 warning that "shoddy and selfish designers will dominate unless...[architectural education] becomes a vital force in the community,"⁵⁰ and his 1913 plea to his profession to escape "the mire and stench of commercialism."⁵¹ Predictably, the School met with opposition very early, and in 1917 Lawrence responded that "whether the architects like it or not, the School is here to stay."⁵² In 1925,⁵³ William Knighton even drafted a legislative bill to abolish the School. Lawrence also criticised the wealthy businessmen who were the principal clients of his profession, writing in 1918, for example, that "1.2% of the population of Multnomah County controls 75% of the wealth...We have allowed a favored and too often unscrupulous few to exploit what God gave all."⁵⁴ Lawrence's ex-partner, E.B. MacNaughton, who moved on to become president of the First National Bank, later said that "while so many of us were making money, Lawrence was making men."⁵⁵

Lawrence wrote that his critics considered him merely a dreamer, "a too outspoken customer who won't play the game,"⁵⁶ or assumed incorrectly that he was driven by personal ambition. But it is clear from his writings that he did see himself as possessing a special power of 'being right': "At such times work became noble, solving problems carried spiritual thrills...There was might in design and...right planning. There was a place for the strong, ego--...the selflessness of the big moments and yes even the selfishness."⁵⁷

Increasingly, Lawrence believed that he could best accomplish his goals through the future architects he was training: "There is the great hope of the profession in the west--absolutely...If I am able to do anything in the future in up-lifting the profession, it will be more through [the University] connection than anything else."⁵⁸

HARD TIMES

Lawrence's comfortable financial means dissolved during his early years in Oregon. He was generous in his financial support for the Portland Architectural Club and his other causes. His fees were often unrealistically low for the time that he and his office lavished on design and construction supervision. He invested in an unproductive gold mine and other unprofitable ventures. In 1914 he hesitated to take charge of the founding of the school of architecture because he hadn't "got out of debt yet."⁵⁹ By 1918, he added: "What a fool I have been to let my affairs get so snarled up."⁶⁰ After better years in the early 1920s, he wrote in 1926 that financial problems prevented him from sending his boys to Dartmouth and Andover.⁶¹ The Great Depression hit hard, though he had more work than many Portland architects. In 1931, he wrote this chilling description of a day in his office: "Yesterday was typical--first a cripple selling trinkets, followed by an old French draftsman--wanting $2 to get his coat out of pawn, then three former students--no job--no way to get back--then a call from [an acquaintance]...trying to find a loan."⁶² Lawrence contemplated moving full time to Eugene "to cut corners,"⁶³ and complained that an extra trip to Eugene on university business "cost me $25.00 which I can't spare just now."⁶⁴ He even considered splitting his house up into four or five apartments. He hoped that the rush of postwar work would finally solve his financial problems, but he died still troubled about his debts.

Financial troubles, bouts of sickness, and the lack of productive work contributed to the periods of depression which recurred during his last two decades. He was often happiest when he was the busiest, as indicated by this 1920 comment: "I have never been so gloriously busy nor challenged to the limit as in the past few months;"⁶⁵ but he had limits too: "The school is taking every ounce of my spare time and is pretty nearly breaking me mentally."⁶⁶ Bed-ridden with painful neuritis for several weeks in early 1925, he traveled to sunshine and relaxation in San Diego and returned somewhat improved, but health problems persisted. Slackening his pace during the summer of 1926, he wrote that he had "again learned the joy in leisure and loafing--and dreaming--and communing--and fishing--and rowing--and tramping--and sketching."⁶⁷ A year later and exhausted again he wrote: "I've got to do something it seems for the mental activity is nil...don't want to think--don't want to play--don't want to work!"⁶⁸

Lawrence wrote, using the third person, about a significant event in late 1929 when, just having turned fifty years of age, he confronted the photographs above his work desk of the people who had by their examples helped him mold his outlook on life. The earlier three who had influenced him had been joined by Willcox, President Campbell, sculptor Roswell Dosch, Charles Lawrence, President Penrose of Whitman College, and others: "There they were, twelve good men and true, peering into [his] soul...What they seemed to see now, [he] was ashamed of...A black, black mood indeed, for one fifty and world weary. How futile was the battle anyway--the rewards going to the mighty and the cunning! But was it so?--the real rewards?...The twelve good men and true gave the lie to this thought...Crystal clear the twelve spoke saying--'Serve', 'See beauty', 'Create', 'Solve', 'Have faith', 'Admit not defeat', 'Overcome', 'Laugh', 'Sing', 'Be kind', 'Have charity', 'Envy not', 'Lead', 'Be humble', 'Have courage', 'Give praise'...It was as if the jury had found him guilty. But in the process he had been washed cleaner somehow, and the twelve good men and true were saying--'Carry on', 'Play and work and give'."⁶⁹

In September 1932, during university administrative upheavals, Lawrence sent this brief telegram to Willcox: "NERVES SHOT, ABOUT TO ASK FOR LEAVE OF ABSENCE AS ONLY SOLUTION."⁷⁰ Citing "the condition of my health, together with other compelling reasons,"⁷¹ he requested and received a one year leave, stating that he would later be better able to judge if he cared to return. Soon after, he wrote that he was sleeping better, "and really believe I'll keep my sanity."⁷² But later his wife described him as tired, nervous, and worried about finances,⁷³ and he wrote to his friend Willcox that there was "no fight left in me. Tired and heart sick over our futile efforts."⁷⁴ Willcox responded: "You try to do too much;...nobody can survive the pace you seem possessed to sustain. When are you going to accept perfectly natural human limitations?...If you will tackle big things, you will have to recognize that they are not accomplished in a minute."⁷⁵ He became a finalist in the search for a new dean for the architecture school at Columbia University, though ambivalent: "I can't warm up about going elsewhere."⁷⁶ "Imagine me in that picture--where winning is of paramount importance."⁷⁷ He returned to the University after his year away, but conditions had not much changed.

Lawrence's proposal in December 1933 to replace Portland's historic Pioneer Post Office prompted what was probably his most difficult personal attack. 1933 was the bottom of the Depression, with 83% of construction workers unemployed. Lawrence designed a nine-story civic building to be financed with credit from the Public Works Administration, which would have created over a million hours of construction work, and provided a home for museums of art, natural history, and history as well as a library and civic theater. Lawrence stated that the site of the often-threatened Post Office was the only practical site, and he argued that efforts to save it would be fruitless in any case. The Oregon chapter of the AIA, however, had passed a resolution urging preservation of the Post Office. They considered Lawrence's conduct "injurious to the interest of the Chapter,"⁷⁸ and quietly suspended his membership for six months in the chapter which he had founded. Lawrence wrote two drafts of a letter to the national AIA objecting to this action by the local chapter, but he served his sentence quietly and never sent the letter. His building was not built, and the Post Office Building still stands. In general Lawrence was not insensitive to historic buildings. His willingness to sacrifice the Post Office to create jobs in the depths of the Depression seems related to his fundamental belief that people were more important than buildings. Though suspended from the AIA, he was honored three months later by the Oregon Building Congress for his efforts in promoting work and for his high professional ideals and fairness.

In spite of this episode, Willcox believed "Ellis [was] much less distraught...than he was a year or so ago."⁷⁹ Lawrence again considered moving to Eugene, this time including giving up his practice; but his partners persuaded him to stay on. In 1941, he again considered resigning as dean, but worried that there would be "no telling if the School ideals would survive...I crave peace--contemplation--I want to write more."⁸⁰ He took a leave of absence from the University in the Spring of 1942 and devoted much of the following months to writing.

WRITING

Lawrence had been writing articles and short stories for several years, mostly about education, personal reminiscences, and sketches of people. Many convey his warm personal sensitivity to people, including tales of his sailmaker grandfather, his grandchildren and other children, a Scotch stonemason, a cowboy woodcarver, the School's janitor of many years, a prospector friend, and people whom he had met on trains and trolleys.⁸¹ The City of Good Will,⁸² one of his two novels, is about a utopian community founded on the Oregon coast by "The Old Foggies" (Lawrence and several of his friends, thinly disguised) after Lawrence's gold mine unexpectedly made him a millionaire. The other novel is a murder mystery titled The Red Tide,⁸³ which stars a "Miss Marple"-like character patterned after Camilla Leach, the elderly first secretary/librarian of the School of Architecture and Allied Arts. Lawrence described this novel as "three murders, a suicide, three dead dogs, one canary, one cat,"⁸⁴ and "pretty awful,"⁸⁵ explaining it as "just exercise,"⁸⁶ and noting that his writing kept him "a bit more sane."⁸⁷ Some of his non-fictional writing was published in professional journals, but The Atlantic Monthly, Saturday Evening Post, Harper's Magazine, and others rejected his manuscripts. He corresponded with two literary agents who suggested improvements, including the introduction of more "conflict" in his writing, which Lawrence resisted. In 1944, still writing, he commented "I'd drop my writing quick if I could get a real job at designing a worthwhile building."⁸⁸

The photographs around Lawrence's desk grew in number to two dozen. Lawrence took on the major problems of the world. He wrote The World Federation to propose an alternative to the League of Nations that would be a "Union of People" in which "art, the only universal language", would play a vital role.⁸⁹ His article, "Wanted: a Workable Mechanism for Effective Democracy," was published in Spanish and English in the bulletin of the Pan-American Commission on Inter-municipal Cooperation.⁹⁰

LOOKING BACK

Only three days before his death he wrote in his diary: "rain--very low in spirits. worry--on verge of surrender...I can't measure up. at home. in office--or at school. so depressed."⁹¹ But there was enjoyment and satisfaction too in his final days. Writing a few months before his death, he reflected upon "the making of a School, the keeping of the family loyalties of the staff, the interferences, retardents, the starting of forward looking ventures and resulting steam roller tactics of our critics...It hasn't all been joy and rapture these last 30 years. But gosh we did have a good time trying didn't we?"⁹²

Lawrence's professional practice spanned the difficult years of two world wars and the Great Depression. His goals were monumental. He held extremely demanding standards for himself. It is not surprising that personal depression sometimes intervened. The wonder is that he accomplished so much. It seems significant that many who knew him remember best his good sense of humor.

In "The Old Gentleman Nears Sixty," Lawrence had written: "Can I find a way to grow old gracefully, or will I surrender to aches and pains, resentments and grouches? Will I radiate serenity, or spread venom as I plunge into the sixties?...I will try to woo back my old loves--music, color, poetry, the creative life, faces, birds, flowers and gardens."⁹³ There is much in his final years to indicate that these old loves were successfully wooed.

Near the end of his life he speculated that perhaps he was a tragic optimist; looking back, he wondered if he had played enough:⁹⁴ "Here and there have been real highlights--but for the most part half tones have dominated that have been more pleasurable in the long run I begin to think...I see myself as a follower of beauty and service--a lover of human nature--a profound believer that the ills of civilization don't come from inherent evil in the human nature--a seeker after the defects in the mechanisms on which human relations in politics, religion, education depends, so that if I can gain wisdom enough I may contribute even in a small way to their eradication."⁹⁵

Lawrence died suddenly of heart failure at his room in the Collier House on the university campus in Eugene on February 27, 1946. He was 66 years old.

Allen Eaton said in memory of him: "I have never known any man to reach out as far and yet preserve all those intimate personal relations that were so precious to him...To all situations he brought in fine proportion a mixture of three precious elements--a sense of beauty, a sense of humor, and a sense of right. They were not only his philosophy, but the stuff of his life."⁹⁶

ARCHITECTURAL SIGNIFICANCE

The broad significance of Ellis Lawrence and his work is apparent from the preceding biographical summary. Some additional observations are appropriate concerning the significance of his architectural work in particular.

It is difficult to separate his buildings from his other work, because of their interwoven nature. The best example of this is perhaps the strong relationship between his buildings and the allied arts. Lawrence's work is characterized by a life-long advocacy for the collaboration of artists and architects, as is apparent in the organization of the School of Architecture and Allied Arts, and in his collaboration with Richard Bock, Frederick Baker, Avard Fairbanks and other craftsmen in the eclectic decoration of his buildings.

Lawrence's architectural work has been little known, though of possibly greater influence than any other Oregon architect until Pietro Belluschi. Many of his buildings have been unidentified, and some have been falsely attributed to other architects. This was due to a lack of research into Lawrence's work, and to the loss of much of his records and drawings. The painstaking research to reconstruct his design record has uncovered a far larger and richer legacy of projects than anyone had suspected.

There are three primary aspects to the significance of Lawrence's design work. First, is his incorporation of the arts and crafts into architecture as described above. Second, is his pioneering attention to city and regional planning issues. Third, are his unique attempts to bridge modern and traditional design.

Some of his work received attention in periodicals of his time, but there has been no attempt, prior to the research related to this survey, to assess the overall significance of his work. This lack of attention may have been due in part to the waning, in mid-century, of interest in the experiments with eclectic styles with which Lawrence was identified. As the attention of architectural critics shifted to the modern movement, Lawrence's integration of the decorative arts and crafts in his architecture and his manipulations of eclectic historic details received little attention.

Preservation architect George McMath has described this eclectic period in Portland by commenting that "the ingeniousness of the architect was measured by his ability to stuff a 20th century function into a first or 15th or 17th century package" (Space, Style and Structure, I:p325). Unlike most of his contemporaries practicing academic eclecticism, however, Lawrence was not merely applying historical details or stuffing traditional packages; he was experimenting boldly with attempts to bridge the gap between traditional and modern design and between traditional and modern ways to design and to build. He sought ways to expand the possibilities of design without abandoning the ties to tradition. In this attempt to fuse tradition and modern functionalism, Lawrence was much like his better-known contemporary, Bertram Goodhue.

Lawrence was deeply committed to modern notions regarding informality and openness in plan, daylighting, functionalism, spatially complex responses to complex sites, and architecture's mission to society. He often ordered his designs with Beaux Arts formality, but then dramatically deviated from traditional formulas with new spatial configurations rooted in American informality. He dressed these forms in familiar details and ornament which were often assembled in unexpected juxtaposition, for example at The Museum of Art at the University of Oregon.

A striking expression of this approach is the contrast of the formal front and informal rear of so many of his buildings. The front of many of his houses is symmetrical and predictable, but the rear breaks out in unexpected directions and planes. Lawrence may well have pioneered this type of residential design in the Northwest. His Spencer House of 1909 is the earliest known example.

He may have been the first architect to introduce the Arts and Crafts style into Oregon, in his own home of 1906. His Bronaugh house of 1911 may have introduced the open interior plan into Oregon. These early experiments suggest a role for Lawrence in the development of the Northwest Regional Style which has yet to be described.

In his non-residential work Lawrence pioneered innovations such as early Oregon use of Art Deco, and the first use in the Northwest of a lamella roof.

In a summing up in 1944, he described his preferences in architecture, writing in the third person, that he "still worships at the shrines of the Greek Doric Temple and the Cathedrals, but he has long since turned to the functionalism of Viollet le Duc, Emerson, Louis Sullivan, Greenough, as a prerequisite of his personal language of plastic form... He is trying to create the forms of today's civilization even though he still cherishes the masterpieces of the past. Once...it was the City Beautiful he pled for; now it is the City Functional."

ELLIS LAWRENCE BUILDING SURVEY SURVEY METHODOLOGY

The difficulty of the survey was much greater than anticipated, due to the lack of adequate surviving records and due to the logistical problems inherent in the survey of such geographically dispersed properties.

Project Director Kim Lakin was responsible for the survey of properties in the region bounded by Portland, Astoria, Salem and Yamhill County.

Project Director Michael Shellenbarger was responsible for the survey of properties elsewhere, plus some specific unbuilt properties in Kim Lakin's region. In addition, he researched records available at the University of Oregon which pertained to all of Lawrence's work.

Lawrence's Job Index was the source for beginning the task of identifying specific projects. Unfortunately, most of the projects were very poorly identified, often limited to a person's name (sometimes mis-spelled) or to a possible building name but with no address or city noted. This Job Index was not a typical Job # List; that is, it was not a list of projects and job numbers listed as each job was acquired. Lawrence must have kept such a list, but it has not been found. His Job Index appears to have been made, sometime after Lawrence died, to inventory drawings or other materials which were stored in the office. Many of Lawrence's projects were not listed at all. Few projects from the MacNaughton, Raymond and Lawrence firm were listed. Unbuilt projects were not distinguished from built work. This list was, however, very useful even though most of the drawings and other materials which it inventoried had been lost. To supplement this inadequate list, other sources were searched in an attempt to achieve as complete a listing of Lawrence's projects as was possible.

These additional sources included Lawrence's correspondence and other records, and periodicals - especially The Pacific Builder and Engineer and The Daily Journal of Commerce, Portland (and its predecessor papers). The surviving Lawrence records are incomplete; many of them have been lost or destroyed. The largest collection is available in Special Collections of the University of Oregon; the UO Archives has additional materials, mostly related to his university work. Except for the university buildings, drawings were very scarce. A box of photos in the Lawrence Collection was very helpful, though many were unidentified. By the completion of this survey, approximately 90% have been identified. That collection also contains copies of Lawrence's statements to his clients for much of his work in the 19-teens and 1920s. These bills led the survey team to many previously unknown projects. Correspondence in Lawrence's Collection, in the W.R.B. Willcox Collection (also housed at the UO Library Special Collections), and in other collections would often mention a project, or provide a clue to one.

Individual research folders were maintained for each project or potential project.

Because most of the remaining Lawrence records and general sources were at the University of Oregon, Project Director Shellenbarger was responsible for researching these materials and for the research for the Lawrence Biography.

During the summer of 1988, Kim Lakin researched City Directories for the Portland area listings and began field work. Sources systematically searched were the Multnomah County Tax Assessor records, Portland Building Permits records, Portland Historic Resources Inventory, Oregon Historic Photo Collection, and the Oregon Biographical Index. Sanborn Maps were used only for downtown Portland properties. Retired architect Richard Marlitt was extremely helpful in identifying photographs and locating buildings listed in Lawrence's Master Index.

Students of The School of Architecture & Allied Arts of the University of Oregon assisted in all aspects of the research and survey:

A Fall Term 1988 class directed by Michael Shellenbarger enrolled eighteen students who were assigned properties and projects to research. A fifty-page instruction manual was prepared to guide students through the survey process, and weekly class instruction and weekly individual meetings were held to guide the survey methods and to share information. Most projects were assigned geographically, and the instructor traveled with most of the students to their areas for on-site survey. Three students were assigned to Portland area projects with Kim Lakin. Several students from the Fall Class continued their research over the remainder of the year.

Project Director Kim Lakin held a similar class for architecture students in Portland during the Spring term. Seven students participated.

Graduate Research Assistant Carolyn Sorrels spent Fall term assisting student volunteers and in searching city directories for the location of unidentified and Portland area projects. Winter term was devoted to Lawrence's competition entries and to a systematic review of the University of Oregon's Board of Regents Minutes, which was concluded during Spring term.

Project Director Shellenbarger spent much of the year researching Lawrence documents in the UO Library and Archives and devoted Spring term to a systematic search of drawings in the University Archives and Physical Plant, assisted by student volunteer George Kramer.

The Pacific Builder and Engineer was recognized as a prime source of information about Lawrence's work. All issues from 1906 to 1946 have been systematically searched. The 1906, 1907, and 1908 years were searched at the University of Washington Library; all other issues were sent from the Multnomah Library to the University of Oregon Library on inter-library loan. Except for 1908, which was searched by a student volunteer, all years were searched by Project Director Shellenbarger. A scanning method was used, looking through the pages of individual project listings for Lawrence's firm name; so projects which were not identified with his name would be noted only if some other name was quickly identified by such a method. All Oregon listings, and listings for some Washington cities where Lawrence was known to work, were searched; other areas were considered too unlikely to warrant the search time involved. Reliability of this method was considered high. Time did not allow a more lengthy search; even with the method described, one year's listings typically took between four and seven hours to search.

Another major source of information was Portland's Daily Journal of Commerce and its predecessor newspapers:

Portland Daily Abstract June 1906 - July 1916
Portland Daily Examiner March 1912 - December 1913
Oregon Building Record January 1914 - May 1916
Daily Record-Abstract July 1916 - Sept. 1925
Daily Journal of Commerce October 1925 - April 1946

The first decades of these newspapers especially were rich with articles about specific buildings, plus project lists, usually identified by architect. Project Director Shellenbarger searched the daily issues from June 1906 through April 1946, except for 1943 and 1944 when WWII had severely limited Lawrence's architectural practice. Microfilm at the UO Library was used for this search, except for missing months in 1926 which were searched on the original newspapers, available from the Multnomah Public Library. Usually the search was limited to scanning the headlines of each daily issue's first page, where experience indicated that most pertinent information would be. Tables of information on building activities and architect's work which were included in the inner pages for most years, were also searched.

The other research methods employed were more typical of usual survey procedures and will not be described in detail here. These procedures were however greatly complicated by the geographical dispersal of the properties. Building records in the city of Portland were the most complete; most cities had very poor records, or none, for building activity prior to WWII. Systematic search of local newspapers was limited to dates known to coincide with known dates of a Lawrence project, and time did not allow even this for much of the work. Local historical museums, city and county planning officials, and others were consulted whenever possible. The geographical dispersal of the properties made it impossible within the project scope to always identify significant historic persons or activities which may have been identified with specific properties in the survey.

Additional grants were received during the survey process to continue the research and mount an exhibit of Lawrence's work. The final survey documents were delayed in order to include the findings of this additional research. Graduate Research Assistant George Kramer assisted in completion of the survey during this portion of the project.

A database of survey information was maintained using the program "Dataease". This program has the capacity to perform complex sorting and analysis of stored data. Data processing occurred on two DOS-system computers, one in Eugene and one in Portland. Records were merged for final analysis.

The procedure for evaluation of the surveyed projects was designed for computer use and to minimize individual differences in scoring between the two project directors

The next portion of this report is a detailed description of the survey and evaluation forms.

ELLIS LAWRENCE BUILDING SURVEY
DESCRIPTION OF SURVEY FORMS

The forms used for this survey were developed specifically for this survey, and were processed using DATAEASE database software on DOS-system computers. There were three basic types of survey forms plus one evaluation form:

1. INVENTORY FORM - for all built properties and for other properties for which sufficient information was available (such as an unbuilt project for which complete construction drawings were produced)
2. UNBUILT FORM - for unbuilt properties for which design drawings or other sources of design information were available.
3. SHORT FORM - for projects about which very little was known.
4. EVALUATION FORM - for surviving, built buildings in Oregon only.

The Unbuilt Form and Short Form were shorter versions of the Inventory Form. Fields on these survey forms which require some explanation, and fields on the Evaluation Form are described in more detail below:

HISTORIC NAME

is the name of the property when first occupied (or during design, if never built).

COMMON NAME

is the name in common use today, if different from the Historic Name.

OTHER NAMES

are other names used at some time in the history of the property.

RESOURCE TYPE

choices:

Building (shelters human activity; includes barn, garage)

Structure (does not shelter human activity)

Site

Object

STATUS

is the current condition of the property; choices:

built & survives

total alteration

collapsed

dismantled (meaning that pieces were saved)

destroyed/accidental fire destroyed/practice fire (by fire department)

razed

destroyed/storm

unbuilt project

built; survives?
unknown

EFL JOB #

is Lawrence's identification number for that project, from drawings or other records. These were assigned chronologically as jobs were begun.

is the year that the adjacent job # was assigned.

FIRST DATE

is the month and year of the earliest known reference to the project; ("c" is used for + - 5 years; "?" is used to indicate that the year is an educated guess)

DESIGN BEGIN

month and year ("c" & "?" see above)

DESIGN END

month and year ("c" & "?" see above); the date on construction drawings or substantially as-built preliminary drawings.

CONSTRUCTION BEGIN

month and year ("c" & "?" see above)

CONSTRUCTION END

month and year ("c" & "?" see above)

LOSS DATE

if property totally no longer exists, month and year ("c" & "?" see above)

is the current owner for a property which still exists; for a property which has been lost, it is the initial owner.

MAP #

As instructed by the Oregon SHPO, this is the County Tax Assessor's map number. USGS map numbers are used for most out of state and unbuilt properties.

ASSESSOR #

is used only for Portland properties.

ORIGINAL USE

is the use, or function, of the property when it was first occupied. The format and categories follow guidelines of the Oregon SHPO.

PRESENT USE

is the current use, or function, of the property. The format and categories follow guidelines of the Oregon SHPO.

SITE

is an estimate, in acres, of the size of the site of the property. This usually corresponded with legal property limits, but for very large sites it included only the portion which related significantly to the inventoried building, including all area designed by Lawrence or a person working with him. For surviving built properties, this is the present size of the site.

THEME

"20th Century Architecture" is listed as a theme on every project in this survey, because of the association with Ellis Lawrence in this century. One or two additional themes were selected for each survey item from a list provided by the Oregon SHPO, and no other themes were possible. Choices:

Communication
 City Planning
 Commercial
 Conservation
 Economics/Philosophy
 Education
 Engineering
 Ethnic Immigrations
 Exploration
 Farming
 Federal Government
 Fine/Applied Arts
 Fraternal Movements
 Horticulture
 Landscape Architecture
 Law
 Literature
 Local Government
 Logging
 Manufacturing/Processing Maritime Medicine
 Military
 Mining
 Monuments
 Music
 Native American
 Performing Arts
 Prehistory
 Recreation
 Religion
 Science
 Settlement
 Social/Humanitarian
 State Government
 Stock Raising
 Transportation

ARCHITECT

This is the official name of Lawrence's architectural firm at the time the surveyed building was designed. For the specific dates of the duration of the use of the various names for Lawrence's firms, see the biography chapter of this report. (Stevens and Lazarus, two early employers of Lawrence were included in the choices but unused in the survey.) The choices for firm names were:

MacNaughton, Raymond and Lawrence
 Ellis F. Lawrence, Architect
 E.F.Lawrence & John J. Burling
 Lawrence & Holford, Assoc. Arch.
 Lawrence and Holford
 Lawrence, Holford, Allyn and Bean
 Lawrence, Holford & Allyn
 Lawrence & Allyn
 Lawrence & Lawrence
 Lawrence, Tucker and Wallmann
 John Calvin Stevens, Architect
 Edgar M. Lazarus, Architect
 Holford & Lawrence (Boston)

CHIEF DESIGNER

is the name of the person believed to have had principle responsibility for the creation of the design for the surveyed property. This name was sometimes revealed in correspondence or surviving drawings, but Lawrence's practice of design collaboration in his office made precise identification of a chief designer difficult. The choices available for this item were:

Ellis F Lawrence
 William Holford
 H Abbott Lawrence
 Walter Church
 Ernest Boyd MacNaughton
 Herbert E. Raymond
 Edgar M. Lazarus

ENGINEERS & CONSULTANTS

Persons or firms who collaborated with Lawrence on the design of the survey building are listed here; the role of each is listed in parenthesis.

CONTRACTORS

Persons or firms who collaborated with Lawrence on the design of the surveyed building are listed here; the portion of the work for which each was contracted is listed in parenthesis.

ARTISTS & CRAFTSMEN

Persons who provided the design and/or execution of specific art works or decorative embellishment of the surveyed building are listed here; the item associated with each is listed in parenthesis.

STYLE

The architectural style of the surveyed building as built (or as designed, if unbuilt) was selected from the list approved for use by the Oregon SHPO.

No other styles could be selected. Use of most style labels were were restricted to specified years. Rosalind Clark's Architecture Oregon Style book was used for illustrations and guidelines. Choices available were:

EFL "STYLE"

This field was used if Ellis F. Lawrence had used a specific style label in describing the surveyed building.

PLAN TYPE & SHAPE

The first field is the shape of the ground floor plan of the surveyed building as built (or as designed for unbuilt buildings). The choices for this field were from a publication recommended by the Oregon SHPO:

square
 rectangular (front long) rectangular (sides long)
 "L"-shaped

"U"-shaped
 "T"-shaped
 "H"-shaped circular polygonal
 center space (atrium)
 pavilion (projec. ends)
 irregular cruciform apsidal
 apse and transept
 apse and narthex
 narthex and transept

The second field describes wings to the basic plan type, if any. Later additions to a built building were not classed as wings. Choices were:

+front wing
 +side wing
 +front & side wings
 +wings on two sides
 +front & two side wings
 +rear wing
 +front and rear wings
 +rear & side wings
 +rear & two side wings
 +front, rear, side wings
 +front, rear, 2 side wings
 +irregular/diagonal wing
 +2 irregular/diagonal wings
 +3 irregular/diagonal wings
 +parallel rear wing addition

FOUNDATION MATERIAL

This refers to the building as initially built. Minor portions of the building with a different type of foundation were ignored. Choices:

concrete
 stone brick unknown

STORIES

Basement, unoccupied attic space, wings and later additions were disregarded. An occupied floor within a roof volume which had any portion of its ceiling sloping was counted as 0.5 story.

BASEMENT

A Basement is substantially below ground level and was not counted as a floor or story.

ROOF FORM

The first field is for the shape of the roof of the surveyed building, as built. The choices for this field were from a publication recommended by the Oregon SHPO:
 low gable (6/12 max.)

medium gable (10/12 max.)
 high gable (10/12 min.)
 gable w/center gable gable w/offset gable cross gable ("X" ridge)
 hipped gable hipped cross gable bellcast gable(s) bellcast hipped gable low hip (6/12 max.)
 medium hip (10/12 max.)
 high hip (10/12 min.)
 truncated hip
 hipped w/center gable bellcast hip
 gabled hip or gablet
 gambrel hipped gambrel bellcast gambrel bellcast hipped gambrel mansard front
 mansard (4 sides)
 shed (single pitch)
 saltbox
 essentially flat
 sawtooth monitor
 dome pyramidal vaulted combination gable & hipped gable gable w/2 offset gables
 gable w/3 offset gables
 hipped gable w/2 offset hipped gables
 hipped gable w/3 offset hipped gables
 high X-hip w/offset gable hipped gables & gablets
 gambrel w/mansard wings
 low hip w/cross gables
 high gable & offset gables

The second field was for dormers or other additional description. Choices:

w/gabled dormer(s) w/swept dormer(s)
 w/hooded dormer(s) (rounded top)
 w/hipped dormer(s) w/hipped gable dormer(s) w/gablet dormer(s) w/shed dormer(s) w/bay dormer(s) w/triangular dormer(s) w/gambrel dormer(s) w/mansard dormer(s) w/inset shed dormers

w/pediment dormer(s) w/combination dormer types
 w/inset dormer(s) w/wall dormer(s) w/inset hooded dormers
 w/center gable
 w/offset gable
 w/center hipped gable w/offset hipped gable
 w/conical tower roof
 w/gable wing
 w/dome(s) w/hip-roof wing(s)

The third field was for the roof material of the building as built. The most visible material was chosen, ignoring other materials. Choices were:

Wood shingles
 Slate shingles
 Ceramic tiles
 Composition shingles
 Bituminous builtup
 Metal

WALL CONSTRUCTION

Minor portions of the building which had a different construction, and later additions, were ignored. Choices:

brick (bearing)
 brick (non-bearing) stone (bearing)
 stone (non-bearing)
 nailed wood frame
 nailed wood frame w/brick veneer
 concrete
 concrete masonry units concrete w/masonry facing masonry bearing & non-bearing combination masonry & wood frame combination concrete & masonry
 unknown
 hollow clay tile

STRUCTURAL FRAME

This is the type of frame which supports the upper floors and roof. Minor portions of the building which had a different structure, and later additions or alterations, were ignored. Choices

nailed wood frame
 heavy timber
 steel frame
 concrete frame
 masonry (bearing)
 unknown
 steel & heavy timber concrete & steel

PRIMARY WINDOW TYPE

The first field was for the material of the major window type as built; choices:

wood steel aluminum
metal

The second field describes the primary window type as built; choices:

1/1 double-hung multi-pane double-hung grouped 1/1 double-hung grouped multi-pane double-hung single-pane casement paired single-pane casement grouped single-pane casement casement +fixed sash
single-sash hinged (hinges top or bottom)
two-sash hinged
grouped hinged sash
vertical-pivot sash
horizontal-pivot sash
horizontal sliding
fixed sash
no windows
multi-pane casement
paired multi-pane casement
grouped multi-pane casement
fixed grouped multi-pane grouped diamond-pane casement
unknown
fixed multi-pane
multi-pane double-hung & casement multi-pane horizontal pivot multi-pane over 1 double-hung union jack grouped awning, casement, fixed

The third field was for special windows in addition to the primary type, or for an additional window description. Choices:

w/special round
w/special elliptical
w/special polygonal
w/special half-round
w/special half-elliptical
w/special bay/oriel
w/special Palladian
w/special Gothic
w/special rounded-top
w/special 1/4 round
w/special oriel, rounded
w/special union jack
w/special ornamental patternwith transoms
w/special hexagonal

w/miscellaneous others
& grouped multi-pane casement

EXTERIOR SURFACE MATERIAL

This describes the exterior wall material as built. A second exterior wall material could be listed in the second field, if applicable; choices:

wood bevel siding
wood weatherboards (rectangular horizontal boards)
wood shiplap
wood drop siding
wood horizontal board
wood board & batten
wood vertical board
wood panel
wood shingles
stucco
stucco w/"half timber"
brick
cast stone
terra cotta
concrete
cut stone
rubble stone
ceramic tile
slate shingles
sheet metal
stone veneer
hollow clay tile
vinyl siding
asbestos shingles
wire mesh

DECORATIVE FEATURES/MATERIALS

as built, unless noted otherwise.

OTHER

Additional decorative features or other distinctive characteristics of the building as built, unless noted otherwise.

CONDITION

This refers to the physical condition or deterioration of the building materials today; choices:

good fair poor

MOVED

This is to record the details if the building has been moved.

ALTERATIONS/ADDITIONS

This is to list changes to the building after its initial construction.

LANDSCAPE FEATURES

This refers to the historic landscape at the completion of Lawrence's work.

ASSOCIATED STRUCTURES

This is to list adjacent accompanying minor structures which exist today.

SETTING

This is the setting as it exists today.

EXTERIOR DETAILS/CRAFTSMANSHIP

This refers to the remaining portions of the original building; choices:
 High-quality skilled work: some fine materials
 Better than average workmanship and materials
 Ordinary construction with no special features
 unknown
 no longer survives

INTERIOR DETAILS/CRAFTSMANSHIP

This refers to the remaining portions of the original building; choices:
 High-quality skilled work: some fine materials

EVALUATION FORM

The first six fields below are repeated from the Inventory form. All choices in the evaluation were assigned numerical values; each evaluated building was then assigned a rank based upon its numerical total. It is important to note that only several of the evaluated properties are only the portions of a building for which Lawrence or his firm had responsibility; the building which has been altered or added to may have a significance which is unrelated to the evaluation of the portion being evaluated here. For example, Lawrence's alteration of the Collier House on the University of Oregon campus has a significance well below that of the house itself.

DISTINCTION OF STYLE

How good an example of its style is it? Choices:
It is a prime example of its identified style. 5
It has distinctive features of its identified style. 2
It has few features associated with its identified style. 0
It is a distinctive aggregate of styles. 5
not applicable 0
Compared to Lawrence's other surviving Oregon buildings, this style is ... Choices:
unique in Oregon 9
unique in its city/town or rural area; one of few in Oregon. 7 unique in its city/town or rural area. 5
one of few (5 or less) in its city/town or rural area. 2
one of several (6 or more) in its city/town or rural area. 0

DISTINCTION OF ARCHITECTURAL DESIGN:

Compared to Lawrence's other surviving Oregon buildings, this design is ... choices:
among his best works, published, & of national significance. 9
among his best works. 7 above average quality, published, & of national significance. 7 above average quality and significance. 5 average quality and significance. 2
below average quality and significance. 0
Is it part of an ensemble of surviving buildings by Lawrence?
choices:
It's located in an ordered arrangement of Lawrence buildings. 9
Lawrence buildings(s) nearby; but arrangement is not ordered. 5
No other Lawrence buildings are nearby. 0

Are structural or technical aspects of the design significant?

choices:

Of high significance.	9
Of moderate significance.	5
Of little significance.	0

LAWRENCE'S PERSONAL INVOLVEMENT IN THE DESIGN PROCESS:

choices:

Lawrence is known to have been the chief designer.	9
Lawrence was probably chief designer, though little evidence.	6
Another designer was probably the chief designer.	2
Another designer is known to have been chief designer.	0

EDUCATIVE OR ASSOCIATIVE VALUE OF HISTORIC EVENTS OR ACTIVITIES:

choices:

Strong association with national historic events/activities.	9
Strong association with state historic events or activities.	7
Strong association with local historic events or activities.	5
Some association with historic events or activities.	2
No known association with historic events or activities.	0

EDUCATIVE OR ASSOCIATIVE VALUE OF HISTORIC PERSONS:

choices:

Strong assoc. with person of national historic significance.	9
Strong assoc. with person(s) of state historic significance.	7
Strong assoc. with person(s) of local historic significance.	5
Some association with significant historic person(s).	2
No known association with a significant historic person.	0

SYMBOLIC ASSOCIATION WITH AN IDEAL, INSTITUTION, OR POLITICAL ENTITY: choices:

Major symbolic association with national ideal/institution.	9
Major symbolic association with state ideal or institution.	7
Major symbolic association with local ideal or institution.	5
Some significant symbolic association.	2
No known significant symbolic association.	0

RANK: choices:

PRIMARY (a score of 57 or more)

Primary properties are those which are excellent architecturally and/or have significant historical associations. These would be eligible for the National Register of Historic Places.

SECONDARY (a score of 41 or more)

Secondary properties are those which are somewhat less significant architecturally or historically, but which should still be eligible for the National Register of Historic Places.

COMPATIBLE (a score of 23 or more)

Compatible properties are those which have less architectural and historical merit, and/or which have been altered enough that integrity is low, and/or which were lacking in historic information during the survey process. These properties would only be eligible for the National Register of Historic Places as part of a district nomination, or if their integrity was restored, or if additional historic significance was established through additional research.

NON-COMPATIBLE (a score of 22 or less)

Non-compatible properties are those which have little known significance or which have been so totally altered that little historic integrity remains and restoration seems unwarranted.
