CROWLEY GETS VISITORS

Hollywood-Roosevelt Hotel
Hollywood, Calif.

Dear Elmer:

Enclosed you will find two dollars for my OLD OREGON subscription. Would you please turn same over to the editor.

Here are some items on alumni visitors who have dropped in and made themselves known to me recently: Ted Larsen, '27, Phi Delta Theta, stopped here for one week at the Roosevelt. Lew Ankeny, ex-'30, Chi Psi, dropped in from Seattle. Dr. Del Stanard, '14, M.D. '21, called in. Howard Page, ex-'31, of Wilmington; Catherine Clendenning, ex-'30; and Walton Crane, ex-'30, Beta Theta Pi, are others who have been here. Russell Gowans, '25, Delta Tau Delta, was another visitor. He is a former all-coast basketball star.

Regards,

Ed Crowley, Jr., ex-'28

(Ed.: Howard Page is with the Coos Bay Lumber Co. Dr. Stanard is president of the Alumni Association and a Eugene citizen.)

STUDENT UNION PLUG

941 Forest Ave.
Glencoe, Ill.

Dear Editor:

The March, 1940, issue of OLD OREGON has given a considerable amount of publicity in its opening article to the subject of a Student Union. I am writing you this letter to correct a statement that was made in error in this article, to the effect that the Class of '24 was instrumental in starting the move for a Student Union at Oregon. I have been thinking of writing you ever since reading that incorrect statement, and when I saw John MacGregor in New York last week, while there on business, I discovered that he also was concerned that the Class of '23 had not been given proper credit.

John MacGregor, Ken Youel, and I attended a student body officers conference in Berkeley during our senior year, and returned to Eugene impressed by the Student Union at California, and convinced that one was needed at Oregon. We went into this thoroughly with the Class of '23, and started the ball rolling by securing $100 pledges from a considerable number of the members of the class. (Class of '23 in action below.)

Later an effort was made to collect these pledges for some other purpose.

I am certainly glad to read that the Student Union program now has some chance of materializing, but do feel that when it finally becomes a fact, the Class of '23 should receive full credit for instituting the original move in that direction.

Sincerely yours,

Owen M. Callaway, '23

(Ed.: A plug for Class of '23 is a plug for Student Unionism, hence the happy reception of this letter from Owen M. Callaway, student body vice president in '22-'23. In Chicago he is head of the auto accessories division for all Montgomery, Ward stores. In Glencoe he is the husband of Aulis Anderson, '23, and Dad to Ben and Marion. John M. MacGregor was student body president in '22-'23 and Kenneth Youel was editor of the Emerald. Both have since migrated to Manhattan.)

HUNDRED DOLLAR HANKIES

123 W. 13th St.
New York City.

Dear Editor:

Before I was graduated from the University, I always said I would never be one of those alums who lost contact with the dear old campus. It is so interesting to read OLD OREGON, and of course I read the Emerald every day.

I have been in New York City seven months now and I love it. I still am thrilled over the tall skyscrapers, the gorgeous shops and all. I am working at Saks Fifth Avenue 30 hours a week and going to New York university's school of retailing mornings. I will receive my master of science degree in retailing this June.

It's awfully interesting working at Saks. Many movie stars come in, including Joe Penner, Chester Morris, Katharine Hepburn (in her usual slacks), Rosalind Russell and Constance Bennett.

The debutantes always have their poodles with them—the store is more of a menagerie than a place of business. The Park Avenue ladies dress beautifully and are very charming. They expect the utmost in service, but at the same time they are friendly and pleasant to wait on.

Prices in the store really shocked me at first. We have ladies' handkerchiefs for $85 and handbags from five dollars to two hundred.

My best regards to all.

Lorraine Hunt, '39

(Ed.: Saks' Oregon employee has appeared on several coast-to-coast radio programs in recent months. During the blizzardy New York winter, Lorraine captured second place in a Professor Quiz broadcast. She was awarded merchandising scholarship at NYU last year.)

The Cover in Words

Queen Betty and her Junior Weekend court came from the ranks of junior women at Oregon. About the portrait of petite Betty, the work of Kennell-Ellis studio, are the four princesses picked to reign with the queen for a memorable three days beginning May 10.

Credit for the full length studies in film goes to camera-conscious Ten Kenyon, Oregon's man of much equipment.

Queen Betty is president of AWS and a member of Chi Omega. Princesses: Janet, Kappa Alpha Theta; Sue, Alpha Phi; Laura Jean, Kappa Kappa Gamma; Eleanor, Pi Beta Phi.

Owen Callaway's letter above reminds undergrads of '23 that Student Unionism at Oregon gained momentum in their day. With Johnson Hall backgrounding the scene, these students are clicked in quaint costumes, watching the Union gift campaign's tall thermometer rise. Later, the Union plans were temporarily postponed when they elected to build McArthur Court's basketball pavilion first

"Springtime in Vienna" By JOHN CAVANAGH, '41

Promotion Chairman John Cavanagh spells the words that mean Oregon will experience a successful and arty Junior Weekend May 10, 11 and 12. Claiming Strauss music waltzes on Vienna much alive although Austria no longer knows geographical existence, the writer pictures the campus as a place to live when cafes, pinafore dresses, symphonic melodies are mixed well with tug-o'-wars, canoe tilting and embarrassing dunks in the senior fountain. An alumnus can let history haunt his memories with thoughts of the best Junior Weekend but the thoroughness with which General Chairman Lloyd Sullivan has picked his personnel to produce "Springtime in Vienna," cautions one not to miss it.—Ed.

A campus clad in the raiment of old Vienna, echoing with the glorious waltzes of Johann Strauss, will greet visitors to the University on Junior Weekend, May 10, 11 and 12. With "Springtime in Vienna" as the theme, the weekend program will feature Strauss music played by the University symphony; the traditional Canoe Fete, enlarged, elaborated, more colorful than ever; the unforgettable Junior Prom, and an entire student body and campus devoted to recreating the gayety of the Vienna of Strauss.

Marking the 50th anniversary of formal Junior class activities, the weekend program this year will represent a striking combination of tradition and innovation. Through the artful planning of general chairman, Lloyd Sullivan, and his committee, traditional events such as the campus luncheon, the Canoe Fete, and Junior prom will be characterized by new settings which will relate them more closely than ever before to the theme of the whole weekend.

CAMPUS LUNCHEON

To the campus luncheon, traditional food fest, will be given the atmosphere of a Viennese cafe, an atmosphere which will be furthered by the appearance of the gayly-colored, peasant pinafore dresses which are now being introduced to University coeds as official Junior Weekend garb. This marks the first time that University students have actually dressed their part in the fanciful, colorful and thoroughly romantic world which is created on the campus for Junior Weekend. New in its theme and atmosphere but old in the traditions which surround it, the luncheon will be the occasion for the annual ceremonies of Friars, Mortar Board and Asklepiads. Strong-arm discipline and a quick trip to the senior fountain will be the fate of unwary undergrads who break with tradition in the way of apparel.

UNIVERSITY SYMPHONY

Familiar, memory-laden Strauss waltzes, played by the splendid University Symphony, will weave a rich background for the floats which drift down the race to be reviewed by Queen Betty Buchanan and her court at the Canoe Fete on Saturday night. From a specially constructed shell at the edge of the Millrace, the 70-piece orchestra will play the more familiar of the Strauss compositions. Around each waltz, a story has been woven by Patricia Erickson, originator of the theme—a story which will be depicted by the float which bears the name of that waltz. The extravagant coloring of the floats and stage, the somberly beautiful setting of the Millrace, the music—all will combine to make the Canoe Fete an event not easily forgotten by those seeing it.

NEW TUG-O'-WAR

A Viennese ball, reminiscent of the days of Strauss, furnishes the motif for the Junior Prom this year. Programs, decorations, and stage will all relate the Prom to the theme of the whole weekend. Under the direction of Wally Rossmann, arrangements for a notable orchestra are being made.

Dr. Luella Clay Carson, first dean of women at the University, suggested a "flag rush" in 1890, officially inaugurating Junior Weekend at Oregon. She died May 3, 1938.

Husky underclassmen will add their part to the weekend, with a tug-o'-war which promises to have a new slant. A pit full of mud will replace the Millrace as Davy Jones' locker for the unfortunate class which tugs the least. Freshmen and sophomores will line up on opposite sides of the pit and there will be many a mud bath before either side proves its supremacy. Old as the "O" itself is the custom which the freshmen will observe when they trek to Skinners' butte, laden with paint buckets, to paint the huge concrete letter a gleaming yellow.

MOTHERS' DAY PLANS

For those who like their entertainment on the athletic side, there will be several events scheduled. A baseball game will be played on Saturday afternoon, and both a track meet and a football scrimmage are possible attractions.

Mothers of University students will be feted throughout the weekend, special plans for their entertainment being laid by a committee headed by Majeane Glover. Tours of the campus for those mothers who are making their first visit will give them an opportunity to become acquainted with parts of the University not visible to the casual eye. The greenery of a garden set in the shade of an old orchard will provide place for a restful pause for mothers and other guests Saturday when the University concert band will present a program in the outdoor amphitheatre of the Music School. Directed by John Stehn, the best collegiate concert band on the coast will combine old and new when it presents for the first time the University fight songs composed by students and alumni plus a varied program of old favorites.

GREAT DAYS COMING

Committees, many and varied, are carrying on every conceivable activity preparing the campus for this most festive weekend of the year. Sounds of construction, drifting up from the banks of the Millrace, indicate that crews under the direction of Canoe Fete head, Fred Ehlers, are already at work on the permanent bases on which the floats themselves will be built. Student photographers getting shots of the queen and her court, Rex Underwood leading the symphony in rehearsals of Strauss music, girls wearing pinafore dresses, crews noisily working on construction of the huge sound shell—these and myriad other activities are keeping the campus actively and enthusiastically aware that there are great days coming.

Medical Alums Meet

Post-graduate session of the University of Oregon Medical School Alumni Association will be May 1-3 in Portland, according to Dr. Thomas D. Robertson, president of the group.

Registration will be at 8:00 a.m. May 1 at the Multnomah County hospital. Class reunion dinners will take place that evening at the Heathman hotel. During the afternoon of May 3, the group will have its business meeting and election of officers in the Medical Dental building auditorium. This will be followed in the evening by an Alumni banquet and dance at the Multnomah hotel.

Outstanding guest speakers have been chosen for the session. They include Dr. Edwin Bannick, an internist from Seattle; Dr. Harry Dietrich, a pediatrician from Beverley Hills, Calif.; and Dr. F. H. Falls of Chicago, who specializes in obstetrics and gynecology.

"This is the first time that we have ever had three guest speakers and, therefore, we fully expect a good attendance," states Dr. Robertson. A model clinical pathological conference will be conducted by Dr. Warren C. Hunter and his staff. Dr. Joseph Beeman will explain the functions of the crime detection laboratory. Both of these men are professors at the University of Oregon Medical School in Portland.

Mountie Visits

Fifteen months in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police hasn't changed Alfred Tingle from his former self as a '38 graduate of Oregon. A British subject, Tingle emphasized his duties did not involve horsemanship but criminal investigation and routine civil duties.

"The Mounties have a troop who ride horses for show purposes," related the former Eugene resident but the Canadian FBI is doing away with animals in its work. Appointed to his post in January, '39, Tingle served nine months in training at Regina, Sask. Then he was transferred to Saskatoon in the same province with the duty of guarding prisoners and handling jail escorts.

On furlough for three weeks, the Canadian is everything a romantic coed expects of a Mountie: tall, blonde, athletic, handsome. His colorful uniform, left above the 49th parallel, would be unnecessary to make him a popular "pigger" at Oregon.

Union County Unites

Raymond O. Williams, '14, of LaGrande is Union County Director for the Oregon Alumni Association. Last month he organized an alumni group for his own county of approximately 150 graduates, which has become the subject of much study by other County Directors, according to Elmer Fansett, Alumni Secretary.

Officers for the Union County Ducks, the name selected says Williams, are Dr. Ray Murphy, ex-'13, president; Homer V. Leffel, ex-'18, first vice president; Merlin Batley, '16, second vice president; and Miss Janet Bingner, '38, secretary-treasurer.

"In discussing the formation of such an organization with a number of alumni, I find that it has met with their approval to a much greater degree than I had anticipated," revealed Williams. "They not only feel that we should be organized but have expressed their willingness to accept appointments and committee assignments without reservations."

Frosh Write Features

By Jonathan Kahananui, '43

Fifty-six bashed out "safeties" and three went down lashing out hefty "chops" for a .949 "team batting average," when freshman journalism students at the University of Oregon, in the initial such assignment this year, submitted 59 feature interviews to newspapers throughout the state and elsewhere for publication and had 56 of them "run."

Twenty-four Oregon newspapers, one Washington, and one Canadian published the 56 articles, giving an inch total exceeding 670 and averaging about 600 words apiece for approximately 33,500 words in all.

It was "get a story printed in such-and-such a time, or else . . ." for the embryo newswriters, as their instructor, assistant University of Oregon journalism professor James L. C. Ford, explains.

"About three weeks before the end of winter term, I told the kids that they'd have to get an interview printed in an outside paper in order to pass the course. They took me up and literally called my bluff."

Professor Ford was "tickled" with the showing his fledglings made, and expressed his "sincere appreciation" for the "kind cooperation" of newspaper editors in whose "sheets" stories were run, realizing that without it, "the venture would not have been the success that it was."

Tillamook Talk

Charles D. Byrne, secretary of the State Board of Higher Education, spoke to 50 Oregon State and University of Oregon alumni, mothers and dads the evening of March 27 in Tillamook. He substituted for Chancellor Frederick M. Hunter who was ill.

Tracing the origin of Oregon's unified system of higher education, Byrne pointed out the ways this method has been a saving to the people of this state. Toastmaster at the dinner, which was part of the meeting, was Jack Caufield, representative in the state legislature. He introduced Elmer Fansett and Warren Reid, secretaries of the Oregon and Oregon State Alumni Associations. Chet Knowlton, ex-'32, was co-head for the banquet committee.

Marquam Hill's Medical School and Multnomah Hospital in Portland will be the headquarters for many of Oregon's M.D. Alumni Association members May 1-3. The post-graduate session attendants will hear three top-flight men of science.

Fifty Years of Fete

By WES SULLIVAN, '43

Red-thatched Wes Sullivan searched campus records diligently for historical facts on the weekend of weekends. He was rewarded. The search proved Oregon's 1940 Junior Weekend could gain pomp and ceremony as a fiftieth anniversary occasion. Although unchristened 'til 1908, the event was created in 1890 when Junior Class members slapped Sophomore Classmen, released devilish desires for fear their senior year would breed seriousness preventing further foolish fun.—Ed.

Students attending the University in the first days of its existence may have had to know Cicero and Aristotle, but the veneer of scholarly surroundings could not entirely cover the natural yearning of youth to do something different, something unconventional.

So it was that one day each year the Junior Class threw off the dignity that accompanies a high celluloid collar and patent leather shoes to liberate the pent-up emotions and restrained impulses which could not be carried on into the life of a solemn senior.

INTER-CLASS WAR

One day, without warning, the Juniors would refuse to attend classes and would spend the day seeing, more or less successfully, that everyone else on the campus did likewise. Vivid memories of the previous year usually prompted the Junior Class to center their attentions on the Sophomores, with the result that an inter-class war usually ensued. After one of these encounters President Frank Strong remarked, "Well, another day is over. It's a relief to see that the buildings are still standing."

The organization and planning of the self-imposed holiday was rather weak, but the weaker the organization the more disastrous the result. So one of the members of the faculty, Professor Luella Carson, suggested that the Juniors confine their activities to a flag rush, whereby they would attempt to raise and maintain their class flag on the flagpole in front of Villard hall, while the Sophomores tried to prevent them. This plan was adopted in 1890 to mark the first official Junior day in the history of the University.

Professor Carson undoubtedly meant well when she suggested the plan, but she forgot to take into consideration the lengths to which the classes would go in order to accomplish their ends.

PLAN WORKED

Black eyes, bloodshed and a full infirmary were the only tangible evidence that the plan was working.

Each year more ingenious methods were used by each side. The Juniors would build a crow's nest on the flagpole before the fatal day and keep class members in readiness. Then the Sophomores would raise a hose to the top of Villard Hall and shower their opponents. Many a junior turned flagpole-sitter for the honor of his class.

In 1906, President Prince Campbell saw where the plan was leading and suggested that the classes direct their efforts in a little more constructive vein. This was readily agreed to by both sides, the contest having grown to such a point that although both classes felt duty bound to outdo their predecessors they looked toward the results with some apprehension. The first year the student body turned out en masse to tear down the old wooden fence that completely surrounded the University and the next year open grandstands for Kincaid field were erected.

In 1908, the event was officially christened Junior Weekend, and the activity day was renamed University Day. To celebrate the event, the "O," which now is Eugene's most famous landmark, was erected on Skinner's butte.

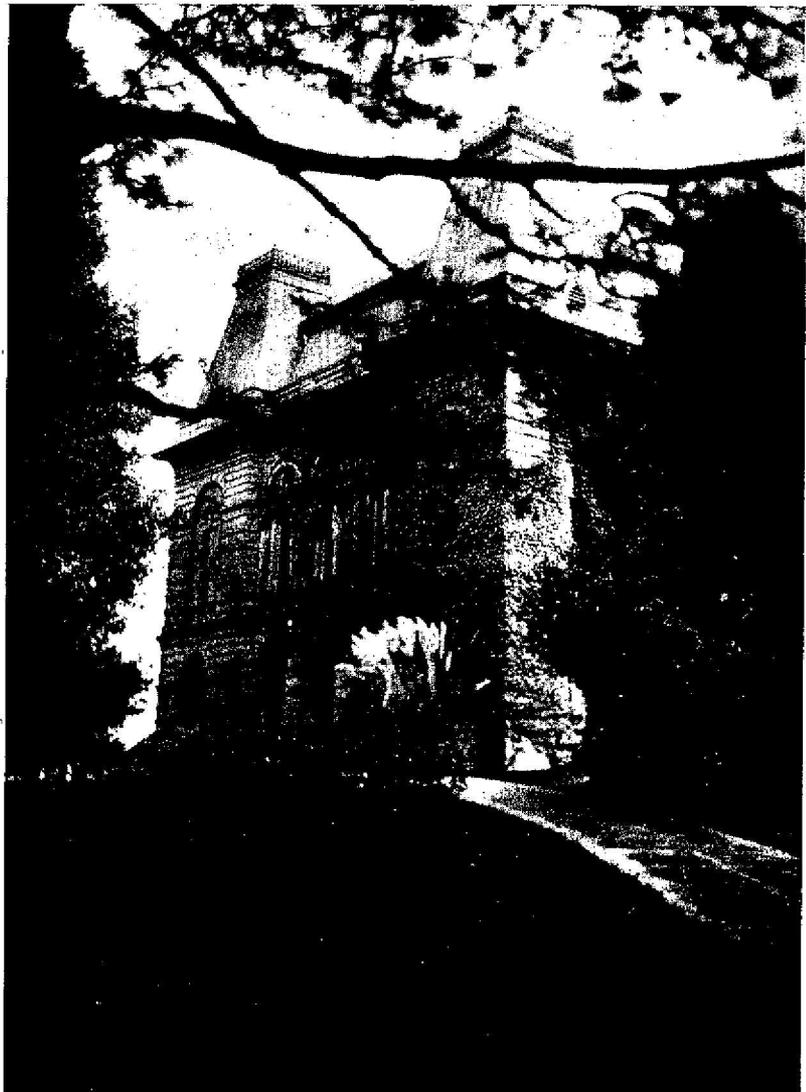

During the next few years other jobs were attempted, such as tearing down the observatory atop Skinner's butte, painting the "O," and building new walks on the campus.

This continued for some time, but the students tired of looking forward to a day of work as a reward for months of study and each year the need for some other method of entertainment forced itself a little more strongly before the faculty. In 1911, with the Millrace in mind, a plan for a canoe fete caught the eye of the student body, and in 1912 the first fete was carried through to completion. It was not the complex and elaborate festival that we witness today, but consisted of two canoe races, four swimming events, a tilting contest, and a diving exhibition. The only floats presented were canoes decorated with flowers and streamers.

As meager as this entertainment was, it was a huge success, and insured itself a permanent place in the list of Junior Weekend activities.

One of the more important additions to the Weekend was the selection of the fete queen, which was begun in 1911.

"The Sophomores would raise a hose to the top of Villard Hall and shower their opponents. Many a Junior turned flag-pole sitter for the honor of his class," relates Wes Sullivan in his history of Junior Weekend.

Sheldon Writes History

By Hal Olney, '42

A small volume with the unimpressive title "History of the University of Oregon"—yet, in its 300-odd pages, the men who built the University live again. In passing before the eyes of the reader they become as alive, as interesting, as real as the men themselves and as vital as the work which they strove to accomplish.

Dr. Sheldon

The history, written by Dr. Henry D. Sheldon, research professor of education and history, is an accurate and interesting account of the beginning and growth of the University. It is interspersed with little personal anecdotes about the men whose names have been inscribed in the University's hall of fame.

A tone of intimacy pervades the whole book making the reader feel that he knows personally the people described. This is aided by the numerous pictures which decorate the pages of the volume and the excerpts from the newspaper editorials scattered liberally throughout the book.

The pictures of such men as John Straub, Mathew P. Deady, Henry Villard, Arnold Bennett Hall and Prince L. Campbell give the readers an intimate tie-up with the men who played starring roles in the stirring melodrama. The editorials reflect clearly and accurately what the people of Oregon were thinking and doing, in a manner as realistic as life itself.

The account begins by describing the legal bouts which finally ended in the selection of Eugene as the site for the University of Oregon. The first few years of slow, painful growth are clearly depicted, as well as the more rapid progress which followed.

The "History of the University of Oregon" came off the presses about the first of April. It was published by Binford's and Mort of Portland.

Dr. Sheldon received his A.B. degree in 1896 from Stanford university and his A.M. degree one year later. He went to Clark university for his Ph.D. degree, which he obtained in 1900. He has been connected with the University of Oregon for 40 years.

At the first of this year he took a three months' vacation in Arizona, from which he returned spring term.

Groesbeck on Board

R. C. Groesbeck of Klamath Falls replaced Herman Oliver, John Day, resigned, on the State Board of Higher Education. He will serve until March 2, 1948.

A native Kansan, Groesbeck has attended Arcadia college, Louisiana, and the Peabody college for Teachers in Nashville, Tenn. Later he took graduate work at the University of Chicago, subsequently assisting in the establishment of proper grade and high schools in sections of the south.

Retiring from educational work, he entered and was graduated from the Illinois College of Law, Chicago. Since then he has practised law in Klamath Falls for the past 25 years. He has a wife and two children.

Lawyer and educator, he has served three terms as president of the Klamath Falls Chamber of Commerce and is chairman of the Klamath county library board.

Portland Banquet

The Portland Alumni Association's banquet of April 18 took place the day OLD OREGON went to press. Unfortunately, this issue does not cover that important event.

Read your Alumni Magazine for May when a complete story of that banquet will be presented.

Art School Birthday

April 2 and 3, the University of Oregon Art School celebrated its 25th birthday. Jammed with dignitaries, alumni and faculty, the Triple-A building experienced a full activity schedule.

Dean William Emerson, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, was honor guest at the festivities. A two-hour open house the first afternoon provided visitors with a peek at student and faculty exhibits.

"We want this school to be a happy home where the student is helped to educate himself." Such is the inscription soon to be carved over the entrance to Oregon's Art School.

Hoke Appointed

Pendleton's Mac Hoke was appointed a member of the State Board of Higher Education last month to succeed E. C. Pease of The Dalles. The wheat grower and business man has much to give the board due to his training and experience.

A 1912 graduate of Oklahoma A. and M., he taught in Idaho Falls, Twin Falls and Boise, Idaho high schools until 1917. Later he served as a county agent in Oregon. Since 1920 he has specialized in wool and grain growing. He is married and has two daughters. One is Joan, a junior majoring in English at the University. She is a member of Kappa Alpha Theta and was recently appointed to the Mothers' Day committee for Junior Weekend.

The State Board appointment by Governor Sprague with senate confirmation is for a nine year term which began March 2.

Following this show, Dean Emerson spoke at Chapman Hall on "Why Not Beauty?"

That evening, the anniversary banquet was celebrated at the Osburn hotel. Speakers included Mrs. Beatrice Walton Sackett, State Board of Higher Education; Chancellor Frederick M. Hunter, President Donald M. Erb, Tom Potter, president of the Allied Arts league; A. Glenn Stanton, president of the Oregon chapter for the American Institute of Architects; Dean Lawrence of the Art School, and Dean Emerson. Toastmaster was Burke Morden, president of the Alumni Art league.

After the banquet, the celebrants visited the Campbell Memorial Art museum and saw the Murray-Warner collection of Oriental art. Wednesday, April 3, group luncheons took place. In the early afternoon, Dean Emerson conferred with architecture majors. At 7:30 p.m. the famous Willcox Wednesday night "bull-session" took place at the professor's home to accommodate the crowds.

In resume, Dean Ellis F. Lawrence has seen the school grow to a staff of 23 with eight departments and a major enrollment of 300. Famed is the school's non-competitive system. Honors, prizes and awards have been forgotten by students. Yet, during the 25 years of its existence, the school has achieved national prominence, becoming one of the finest training centers in the whole nation.

Rogers Tells Tour

Miss Caroline Rogers, ex-'35, authored an article on South America which appeared in a recent issue of Town and Country. On a tour into Chile during the devastating earthquake of January, '39, the journalist sent United Press its first announcement of the disaster.

"Around and About the Other America" captions her Town and Country story which is illustrated with 37 pictures of persons and scenery from photographs collected during this South American jaunt. Miss Rogers was society editor of the Spokane (Wash.) Press before it ceased publication. She is a member of Delta Gamma sorority.

Turn of the Century By BETTY JANE THOMPSON, '40

Bright cerise crowned and cream-brimmed hats bobbing up and down. Lemon yellow and gold pins. Possessors of these items in the year 1900 were the lordly seniors. There weren't very many of them, for the class of '00 was the smallest in the University with only 11 members. They claimed this smallness as a mark of distinction.

They were the first class to have two more years of education than any previous class being required to earn 130 hours to graduate. And this was the year they turned the football tables on O.A.C., reversing the previous year's score of 38-0. On Lincoln's birthday, the first issue of the University of Oregon Weekly rolled off the press. Oregon won the state track meet (repeating the almost yearly occurrence of "coming home with all the money Corvallis had.") The track team won the Northwest Intercollegiate meet with Washington but the latter took Oregon in debate. Football rules were changed to eliminate sideline coaching.

Speaking on "The Spanish War: Justice, Motive, and Effect," the class orator, Homer Angell won first in the University oratorical contest and then the state contest in his junior year. Following that he was elected president of the Intercollegiate Debating league. Their class with the help of Luella Clay Carson staged the first flower and fern procession.

Members were Daisie Allaway, Freshman prexy. She served the sophomore class as secretary, worked in the YWCA, helped organize the girls' glee club, became one of the active members of the Eutaxian, girls' literary and debating society. She entered whole heartedly in the oratorical work, representing her class one year with Arthur Waltz, her future husband (although he didn't know it at the time) in the local oratorical contest. She died in 1914, the only member of her class not now living.

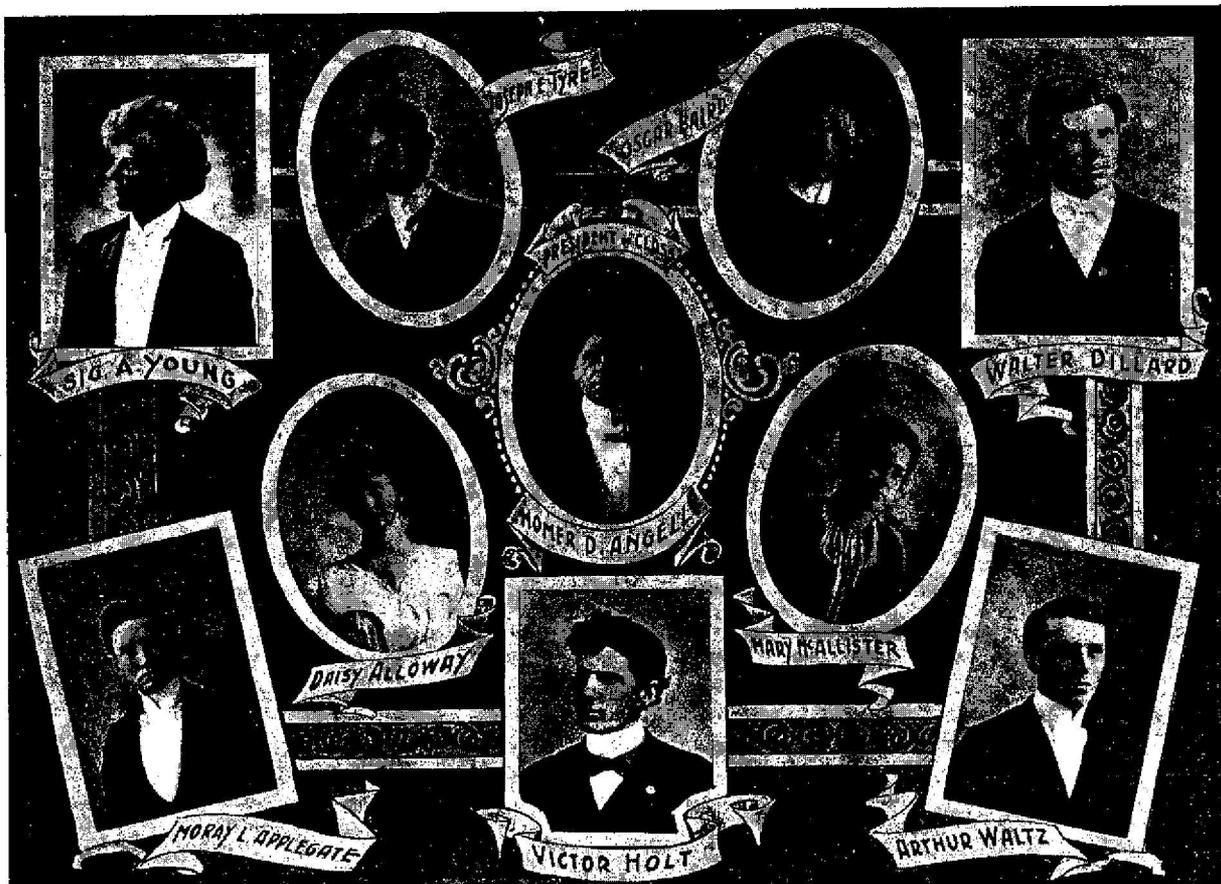

Homer D. Angell was known in his college days as a leader. He began as vice-president of his class. Before he was through, he had served as president of his junior and senior classes, edited the University Monthly, worked in the Laurean society, the YMCA, captained the track team, played guard position in football being named all-Oregon guard. He reorganized the old McKinley-Hobart club, presided over the Republican club. In the summers he did government surveying and in his senior year he had to go home to The Dalles to take the census, returning afterwards for commencement. Pride of his class for oratory he walked off with the Failing prize in his senior year with "The Passing of Barbarism." Named class poet, he read his poem, "Flood of Time," at the dedication of the sturdy tree in front of Villard. He is now in the House of Representatives with a fine record as a Portland lawyer, former member of both the state house and senate.

Red-headed Moray Applegate was a member of the class of '99 until he took a year off and fought for Uncle Sam in the Philippines. Besides his clever, dry-humor work in the debating Philogian group (Philo's), he worked as reporter on the Monthly, later as associate editor. Leaving school he had a colorful career, spending a number of years in Manila as superintendent of the public schools, building the first English-speaking theater in that city. Then to Mexico. There he married, settled down on a large plantation. His debating skill acquired in college didn't aid in influencing the Mexican government, so he returned to the state after confiscation of his land.

Another red head, freckled Oscar Baird, was known as the "boy always up to something." One item in the Weekly announces that "Once a week Baird" was seen in classes that morning. "Spot" as his classmates called him went to Portland after graduation, worked in advertising and is now a salesman there.

Retiring, publicity-avoiding Walter Dillard should have graduated two or three years before, but he took time out to teach. Coming back in time to start in 1896 as a freshman, he found at the beginning of his senior year that he had just one hour a week left to graduate so he worked for his master's degree and taught at the same time. His first class at Eugene high left a year after he got his B.A. Four years following graduation, after serving from 1904 to '11 as county school superintendent, he went to Salem as assistant state superintendent for two years attending Willamette law school at the same time. Practicing law until 1917, he served in the state house in 1915. Because more teachers were needed during the war he went back to that for 9 years, served one year in his brother's abstract office and then became Lane County clerk in '27, the position he now holds.

Oregon's Class of 1900 made up in versatility what it lacked in numbers. Missing from the panel above is Oscar E. Hemenway who now lives at Rt. 2, Eugene. This graduation picture was resurrected from Vol. 4 of the Oregon Monthly. The last number of each volume served yearly as the University annual until 1902.

Oscar Hemenway, one of the Philo's, still lives where he studied during his school years. He received both his B.S. and M.S. degrees from the University. He is engaged in dairying and stock raising.

The inventive Victor Holt has his own business in Portland, and has patented several mining and farm machines. He was vice-president of the "Y," and took an active part in the Philogian society. Two daughters have since graduated from the University, and if he returns this June he will see his nephew Norman awarded a degree.

Returning after a year's absence due to illness, Mary McAlister became a member of the class of '00. She was vice-president of her senior class, and her "With Your Shield, or On It" won the Beekman contest at commencement time. After graduation she entered the business world. Some time ago McMorran and Washburne celebrated with a special Mary Gamber Day after her 21 years of service. She is now retired and lives with her sister.

Tug-o'-war between Tinpants and Blue Denims this year will end in a mud hole rather than the Millrace. No need to dust themselves off.

Class orator Joseph Tyree dropped in from Albany college. A member of the Societas Quirinalis, he was also a track man. Following his graduation he took a position in a Dillon, Mont. school. Today he is practicing medicine in Salt Lake City.

Very shy, Arthur Waltz took an active part in "Y" work, reported on the Monthly, and debated for the Philogians. Following his work at the University, he went to theological school, married Daisie Allaway. After her death he remarried and is today minister of the First Baptist church in Oakland, Calif.

Versatile "Sig" A. Young in his college days was an all-Oregon end, became the hero of the day when he made the first touchdown of the '99 season against Chemawa. After graduation this "Swede from Astoria" went to Montana State School of Mines. Down Mexico way his property went the same way as his classmate's. City engineer of Seaside, he writes Western stories as well as practices engineering.

Old Oregon

was James Mott, now congressman from the first district.

After hard work and much effort, he finally won the selection for his candidate, Ruth Gibson. Fate and the weatherman were against the future congressman and his nominee. When the day came for the coronation Jupiter Pluvius reigned and the whole affair had to be cancelled. Thus it was that the first queen of the Junior Weekend festival never ascended her throne.

These years proved that Junior Weekend was serving a need of the University and serving it well. The event continued to grow in popularity. Athletic contests were added to the list of activities. Even the grim thought of war in 1917 and 1918 could not smother the desire of the students to have their festival.

Mothers' Day ceremonies were added to the attractions offered by the Weekend, and slowly the respect due an honored University tradition crept into the annual activities. Publicity and outside interest prompted the broadcasting of some phases of the program throughout the nation and the taking of newsreel pictures of the Canoe Fete in recent years.

The festival grew in the hearts of University students and in the respect of the outside world. Today they can look with pride at Junior Weekend as the culmination of a year of activities at the University and the symbol of the constructive attitude and loyal spirit which makes up a major part of University life.

Third Library Day

Two anniversaries will be celebrated by the University of Oregon Library May 3, according to M. H. Douglass, librarian. That day will mark the third birthday of Oregon's $500,000 "house of books," and also the 500th year since printing was invented.

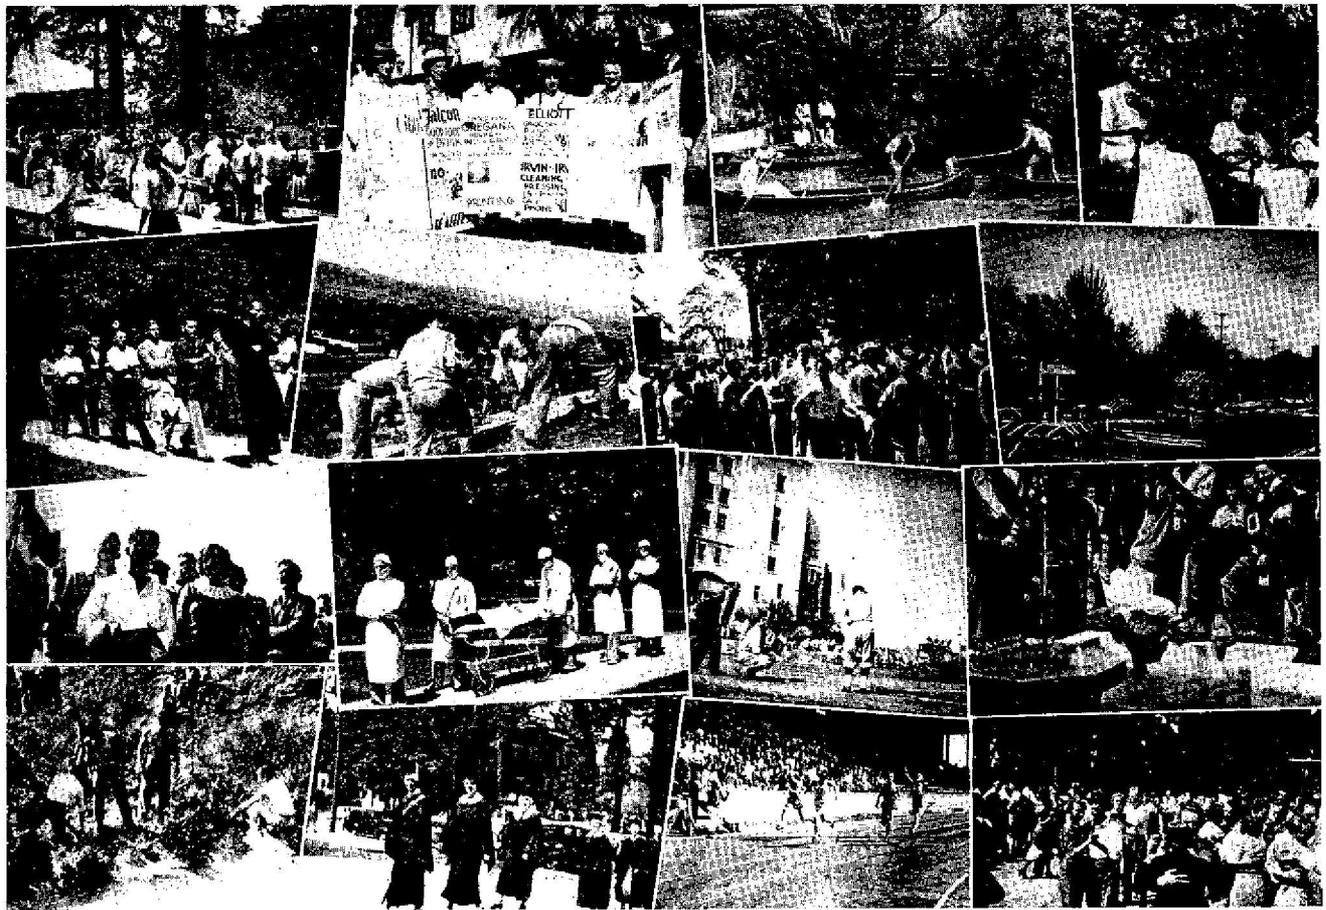

The two events will be jointly observed by an open house in the campus library now regarded as one of the finest in the United States. Exhibits to be shown will include contrast with actual samples of earliest printing and demonstrations on the use of micro-film. This film makes possible the reproduction of an entire newspaper page on a strip slightly more than one inch square.

Aged books from Europe, examples of early printing in the United States with emphasis on Oregon's graphic arts will be displayed. A page of the Gutenberg Bible printed about 1450 will be part of the valuable collection.

Much of the display is drawn from the Library's own archives, but Librarian Douglass has requested that people of the state loan or donate examples of early printing for the exhibition.

In 1908, the cement "O" on Skinner's Butte was erected. This was completed in time to celebrate the christening of Junior Weekend after existing 18 years sans name, sans direction, but plenty of pep.

Junior Weekend has grown from a one-day scrap into a three-day festival. Above are the activities featured in the 1936 Weekend. Top row, left to right: serving campus luncheon; Alpha Delta Sigma initiates; canoe tilting; Queen Peggy Carper and two members of her court. Second row: Friars pledging; painting the "O"; waiting to be served; building the floats. Third row: dance contest winners (now Mr. and Mrs. Phoebus Klonoff); Asklepiads pledges; being ducked for wearing ties. Bottom row: Tug-of-war aftermath; Mortar Board pledges; track; tennis court dance.

FAILURE TO MAKE A SIGNAL is one of the commonest causes of "Traffic Nerves". In tests conducted recently by Dr. George H. Mount, Los Angeles Psychologist, it was found that a sudden shock of this kind may shoot your pulse as high as 35% above normal.

Dr. Mount's tests proved conclusively that there is a physical reaction to the strain we undergo in traffic.

This physical strain saps our energy. It may reduce our efficiency, make us nervous, leave us unduly tired.

What can we do about it? Naturally we can't give up driving. But we can eliminate many of the things that cause "Traffic Nerves". Read the paragraphs below. They tell of two steps you can take tomorrow that will help eliminate many of these causes.

5 common causes of TRAFFIC NERVES

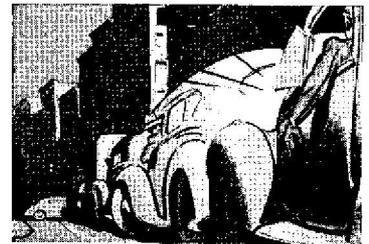

POOR PICK-UP also causes "Traffic Nerves". In a tight spot like this your pulse may jump as high as 50% above normal.

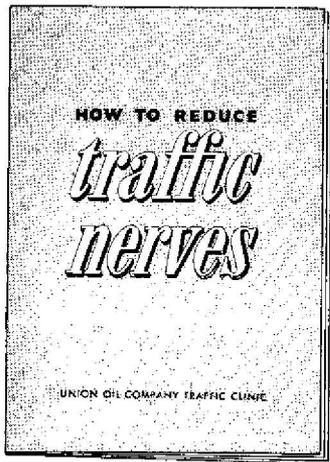

DISTRACTING NOISE is a minor irritant that causes a steady drip, drip, drip of tiny impacts upon your nerves.

POOR VISION is another. These minor irritants are largely responsible for steady strain which raises the average pulse 12% to 27%, even without shocks.

STALLING IN TRAFFIC often shoots your pulse way up. Most drivers that Dr. Mount tested reacted very badly to situations like this.

FREE at your Union Oil station—Tells you how to drive in fog, how to reduce eye-strain, what to do about irritating noises, and many other tips.

2 ways to reduce TRAFFIC NERVES

FIRST, a booklet that tells you the causes of "Traffic Nerves" and how to eliminate many of them

This new booklet has just been published by the Union Oil Company Traffic Clinic, which has been conducting experiments to find out what the driver can do to reduce nerve strain. Get a free copy at your Union Oil station.

SECOND, a gasoline that gives you better performance in traffic

Then, try a tankful of the NEW 76 Gasoline. New 76 helps you reduce "Traffic Nerves" because it is blended especially for traffic. It is high enough in anti-knock to give you a quiet motor. It has power for emergencies.

It is volatile enough to prevent stalling and bucking. It gives you quick starting and fast get-away at signals. It gives you steady, even combustion in crawling traffic. And it is long enough on mileage for real economy.

Thanks to this careful designing, new 76 makes your car easier to handle. Try a tankful tomorrow. See if it doesn't help you reduce "Traffic Nerves".
