To the Editor:

Since you are ever compiling news of the classes, this item may be of interest. My son, Capt. George Horsfall, is in the U. S. Army Medical corps and assigned as surgeon in the Beaumont General hospital, El Paso, Texas. He received his B.A. in '24, M.D. in '28.

My daughter, Marion Horsfall (Kappa Alpha Theta) received her B.A. in '27, and is a teacher in Glendale, Calif. She is California state corresponding secretary for the Association of Childhood Education. Dr. William Horsfall, my husband, though not an alumnus, was named "First Citizen" of Marshfield for 1939.

Mrs. William Horsfall, ex-'95

(Ed.: Mrs. William Horsfall (Lydia E. Yoakam, ex-'95) is state president, American Legion auxiliary, and state vice-regent for D.A.R. Her son, Captain Horsfall, is married to the former Alice Mortenson, '27.)

321 South 12th Ave.
Yakima, Wash.

Dear Editor:

Herewith an item you might care to use in one of your issues:

Two former classmates in the U. of O. School of Journalism and graduates in the class of '22 met by chance in opposite roles on the occasion of the visit to Yakima, Wash. of "Ep" Palmer Hoyt, publisher of the Oregonian, to address the Yakima Chamber of Commerce recently. Hoyt brought an informative and analytical message on "Propaganda and Freedom." The meeting and address was covered for the Yakima Daily Republic by the undersigned.

After the meeting Hoyt visited the Republic plant where several other Oregon grads are members of the staff. They are Leonard Lerwill, '23, city editor, Willard Marsh and Fulton Travis of the class of '37, members of the staff.

Very truly yours,

SMOKI IN HOLLYWOOD

905 E. Jefferson Blvd.
Los Angeles, Calif.

Dear Roy:

Concerning my Hollywood experiences, you will find from my writing (see page 3) that I am a mighty poor narrator. However, since you asked for it I will do my best to give you some of the highlights concerning my career in this town called Hollywood.

Now, I would like to thank all the students and the Alumni Association for the interest they have shown since my arrival here. I hope that if we have the preview of my current picture, "Dark Town Strutters Ball" in Eugene my performance will be considered successful.

Sincerely yours,

Smoki Whitefield, '40

(Ed.: Bob Gino Whitefield, dubbed "Smoki" as a lad living in the haze of smoke-stacked Pittsburg, will be graduated this June from Oregon. He completed his requirements for a degree last summer session, then toured south for movie scouts had tucked a tempting contract in his pocket last spring.)

Marines Tell Success

Luther R. Siebert and Frederick R. Findter, '39 graduates, will both complete their marine training course early this summer, according to information received by the ROTC department.

Upon completion of their studies in Philadelphia they will be transferred to the Pacific coast. Findter, member of Phi Gamma Delta, Tau Delta Chi, Scabbard and Blade, will be assigned to a battleship stationed at San Diego, Calif. Siebert, a member of Beta Gamma Sigma and Tau Delta Chi, will go to the fleet marine force at the same port. He recently competed in the Elliot trophy marksmanship match at Quantico, Va. as a member of the marine corps rifle team.

Oregonian's publisher and Oregon's graduate of '23, E. Palmer Hoyt, is popular as a speaker.

The Cover in Words

Water splashes, workers for Student Unionism and a watchman caught the eye of OLD OREGON camera clickers this month. "Keeper of the Keys" and "In Union There's Strength" are pictures credited to Rita Wright, a senior advertising major, Gerlinger cup winner last spring, and student in George Godfrey's graphic journalism course.

His attentions diverted from Walter Winchellising in the Emerald, Jack Bryant, sophomore journalist, recently visited the men's swimming pool, kept the lens dry long enough to snap Oregon's "Champ Duck Paddlers." With the wet triumvirate is Coach Russ Cutler, blank cartridge pistol in hand, ideas of Eastern records in his head.

In Union There's Strength By GLENN WILLIAMS, '43

Freshman Student Union Chairman Glenn Williams summarizes a faculty committee study with this article. "Union Through Effort" gained significance in the spring of '24 when undergrads campaigned for funds to be used in construction of a Student Union building. Time passed. Last year President Erb appointed this faculty fact-finding group to study Oregon's physical plant, find its possible uses for student social affairs: Dean Ralph W. Leighton, Business Manager J. O. Lindstrom, Athletic Director Anson B. Cornell and Dean of Men Virgil D. Earl. Result: They recommended the President "take steps to bring about the construction of the first unit of a Student Union building that will provide a suitable place for University dances and large social events." Last year a big step was taken when the student executive committee voted to have 20 per cent of funds collected from ASUO memberships earmarked for the Student Union fund. This per cent approximates $5,500 per year.—Ed.

Oregon undergraduates want a Student Union building. This fact is evident. A campus-wide movement discussing what such a structure should include, and methods of financing such a venture make this subject currently popular.

When school began last fall, a Varsity Student Union committee swung into action, found the problem large, but decided it could be overcome successfully. Soon the Unionist spirit spread like the ripple from a pebble puncturing a placid pool. A Freshman Student Union committee was established as a permanent group with replacements being made by the first-year class president. Devoted to the promotion of a Student Union building at Oregon, this group was examined for ability, interest and reasonably high grades to insure steady tenure in school.

Since then, the research carried on by these committees showed considerable conflict between students wishing to use University buildings for dances and other social events and academic departments which needed those plants for educational purposes. Last year this issue came to the foreground in two outstanding instances: when coeds desired the use of Gerlinger hall for an all-campus affair and when the senior class wanted to utilize McArthur Court for their annual ball.

NEED FOR CENTER

In these two instances the difficulty of securing places for student activities was emphasized. More than ever before, students now feel a greater need for such an activity center. They are looking for possible methods of raising funds for the Student Union building which could be used exclusively for extra-curricular events.

Since the Hayward field grandstands, McArthur Court, Infirmary, Chapman hall and Library were financed in part by student building fees, the undergraduate representatives wondered why a Student Union could not be built in part by these fees. Then they found that the State Board of Higher Education had pledged all of the fees for some time to come. Now they have begun discussing other methods of financing this building.

Before going further, these undergraduate committeemen decided to discover if the students wished a "Union through effort." The Freshman Unionists took a poll in the living organizations. The question asked was: "Will you, voluntarily, give your Co-op store receipts, which bear a fluctuating return, to the Student Union building fund?"

CAMPUS BALLOTEERS

With the campus covered by balloteers, the group found 14 of the living organizations had voted 100 per cent in favor of giving their receipts to this fund. All but five houses voted to give theirs by an overwhelming majority. Of the remaining five, one house was deadlocked by a tie.

This fund from Co-op receipts may not make an appreciable sum, but the poll does represent active interest on the part of undergraduates. Sentiment for such a building is springing up in every locale evidenced by heated bull-sessions and the mass attendance of several organizations at the Union exhibit in Johnson hall.

This exhibit presents pictorial and factual information on the progress of Student Union buildings throughout the nation of campuses. A college publication, Kentucky Kernal, on display mentions buildings on its Southern campus eleven times in the front page. Here the Student Union building is cited in eight different articles. Another publication tells of the celebration after the construction of a Student Union building was completed. An alumni magazine tells how the University of Utah is erecting their Union by constant effort of interested alumni.

Missouri's alumni publication proclaims the opening of their Student Union hall after they had been "stuck" many years with an over-ornate tower and two excavations at a fancy price. The students of that school realized the value of such a structure keenly enough to get it.

Oregon students and graduates are beginning to realize the same values. So the chairmen of the Varsity and Freshman Student Union committees were recently invited before the Alumni Holding corporation board to discuss the problem of Union financing. The latter group listened, asked questions, discussed the pledges made by graduates for such a building years ago. Reviewed during the meeting was the fact that Oregon's student executive committee in 1939 put into effect that 20 cents out of every student body dollar collected should be placed in a Student Union fund. In addition, they discussed how the business office of the University recommended that the Co-op store rental be given this fund as well as the rental from property primarily purchased by the University for a Union building (both of these ideas had been approved and are now in effect).

TO VISIT IDAHO

Through a study of buildings on other campuses, the two student committees are acquiring ideas as to the make-up of such an activity center. Plans are being made to visit the Union building at the southern branch of the University of Idaho in Pocatello early in the spring term. This Idaho plant was constructed for a cost under $300,000, a figure estimated necessary for Oregon's first unit.

Before continuing with plans the two student committees made further research. Everywhere they turned the possibilities were discouraging. The buildings generally used are already over-scheduled. Every time these buildings can be used there are added expenses such as reconditioning the floors. As in the case of McArthur Court's pavilion, the floor has to be reconditioned because of its finish being adaptable only for basketball shoes. Floors in other buildings are primarily not for dancing, a fact which presents further difficulties.

Now the cry arises on every side. The students feel they need space which unquestionably will be theirs. They still say with enthusiasm: "Union through effort" will provide room for campus dances, banquets and the inevitable bull sessions.

Blind Grad Author

Miss Elizabeth Shields Hall, '32, blind graduate student in psychology, turned author with an article in the January issue of Teachers' Forum.

"A Study of the Size and Space Concepts of Blind School Children With Those of Seeing School Children" is the lengthy caption. Miss Hall is a member of Phi Beta Kappa, Pi Sigma and Pi Lambda Theta. She became blind after an attack of sleeping sickness before entering the University.

Coach Russ Cutler's swim trio discovered pennants, medals and championship titles could not be converted into $640 needed for their trip to Yale university and a national swim meet. The problem was solved by Chairman Verdi Sederstrom and a crew of undergraduates including Anne Fredericksen, Wendell Wyatt, Erling Jacobsen, George Pasero and Lyle Nelson. Campaigning with a "March of Dimes" slogan, the group acquired the necessary amount within two weeks through cooperating Eugene and Portland Alumni, individual students, local merchants, sophomore and junior classes, Inter-Fraternity and Pan Hellenic councils and the Athletic board.—Ed.

Not a swimming race lost since they've been in school! That's the record of Oregon's three ace swimmers: Jerry Macdonald, Jack Dallas and Sherm Wetmore.

Dallas and Wetmore have been in school three years, in competitive swimming as long, and have never been beaten in four freshman and 13 varsity meets. Macdonald, a sophomore, shattered pool records last year, but was then ineligible for varsity competition.

Campus sports writer Elbert Hawkins says "Dallas and Wetmore hold more pool, dual meet, Northern division and Pacific coast conference records than any other triumvirate. They've done all their record slashing under the handicap of three coaches in as many seasons, too!" Their coach today is physical education instructor Russ Cutler, who has shown excellent results with the sportsmen.

Both Dallas and Wetmore are from Long Beach, Calif. The first is an exponent of the butterfly breast-stroke with an unusual and effective style. Wetmore is a back-stroker. Dallas holds Pacific coast records in the 100- and 200-yard breast stroke. He also has Northern division records in the 200-yard breast-stroke (set in the annual meet at Seattle) for 75-foot pools, and the same for 60-foot pools.

Wetmore's partial list of records include: Pacific coast records in 100-yard and 150-yard back stroke, Northern division title in 150-yard back stroke for both 60- and 75-foot pools. Teaming with Dallas and Wetmore is Jerry Macdonald, free-style ace. These three swam the 300-yard medley against Oregon State for a 3:01.3 race. The Pacific coast record is 3:06, and a two-year national mark is 2:55.

As the "March of Dimes" continue towards certain success, the Oregon swim trio train for the end of March when they entrain for New Haven, Conn., and hopefully plan to break more records at Yale university.

THE NINETIES

Fifteen students comprised the graduating class of 1890. They all were graduated with A.B. degrees.

One year later they had branched out into their occupations: four lawyers, four teachers, two correspondents, one merchant, one photographer, one businessman, one artist, and one tutor at the University of Oregon.

All nine member of the University faculty watched the judging of the Failing-Beekman oration contest which saw Edward H. McAlister, later tutor at the University, win $150 and Miss Agnes M. Greene take the $100 prize.

The Medical School in Portland, then in its third year of existence, had eight graduates, the largest class up to that time.

TURN OF THE CENTURY

The class of 1900 saw the first edition of a newspaper at the University, The Oregon Weekly which ran until 1909 when it was supplanted by the Emerald.

The captain of the track team was Homer D. Angell. He ran the 440-yard dash. His team won the northwest championship.

A short time after the first of the year Angell was appointed census-taker for his home town, The Dalles. He had to rush home and count the populace in a hurry in order to be back for commencement.

A bronze tablet with the inscription "Class of 1900" was fastened to an oak tree near Villard hall as the main feature of class day.

CLASS OF '10

A tug-of-war, baseball game, and other athletic contests between the senior class and the alumni played an important part in the commencement exercises this year.

The graduation activities which lasted four days, started with baccalaureate service Sunday morning and ended Wednesday night with the alumni ball.

Ubiquitous Dr. Dan E. Clark recently assumed the title of history department head at Oregon. Research worker, author, editor and administrator, he boasts 30 years tenure as an academician.

Arthur McCornack Geary, who was manager at the University for several years after his graduation, was a member of the class of 1910.

25 YEARS BACK

Eighty-eight students were graduated in 1915. Seventeen counties of Oregon were represented, a survey revealed.

Among important members of the class were Rex Putnam, now state superintendent of public instruction, and Colton Meek, now principal of Roosevelt high school in Portland.

Lamar Tooze, another graduate, was president of the student body at the University in 1915.

New History Head

By HAL OLNEY, '42

Dr. Dan E. Clark, newly-appointed head of the University history department, might well qualify as "Oregon's man of many achievements." Professor, research worker, author, editor, and administrator, briefly tells the story of the thin-haired professor's career since he became a member of the faculty of the University of Iowa, over 30 years ago.

The versatile educator has been a member of the University faculty for nearly 20 years. He came to Oregon in 1921. Since then he has served the University as professor of history, assistant director of the general extension division, member of the board of editors of the Pacific Historical Review and the Pacific Northwest Quarterly, head of the summer sessions, and, finally, as head of the history department.

In addition, he has written for several publications, has edited and written many pamphlets, and has published his book, "The West in American History," in 1937, which has been warmly received by critics.

Before coming to Oregon, Dr. Clark had published three books, a "Biography of Samuel J. Kirkwood," 1917; "Government of Iowa," 1915; and a "History of Senatorial Elections in Iowa," 1912.

While at the University of Iowa, he did a great deal of research work in history and edited a great many works on the biographical, political, social, and economic history of Iowa. He had editorial direction of the Iowa Journal of History and Politics, a quarterly.

Dr. Clark has carried on research work in the Library of Congress, the British Museum, and the Bibliotheque Nationale of Paris.

Since his appointment as head of the history department, Dr. Clark has been switching back and forth between two offices and two distinct jobs. W. G. Beattie, associate professor of education, has been appointed to succeed Dr. Clark as assistant director of the general extension division, but Professor Beattie's successor has not yet been appointed.

Dr. Clark has been in charge of summer sessions for several years and will continue in this position during the 1940 summer session. Just who will occupy that position after this year's summer session has not been definitely decided.

Welcome to Hollywood

By "SMOKI" WHITEFIELD, '40

The personable title-role star in "Emperor Jones" during its campus showing last spring term was judged a "natural," plucked by visiting movie scouts, optioned off for several years in the nether regions of Southern California. As Smoki Whitefield, he has felt the thrill of applause and envious eyes many times for his limited years. Experiences: Runner-up in Eastern middle-weight Golden Gloves tourney when Joe Louis captured the amateur heavy-weight crown in same contest, singer in the Hall Johnson choir, soloist with Cab Calloway, part-player in "Ol' Man River" and "Tarzan," football and boxing letterman at Oregon.—Ed.

"Welcome to Hollywood!" I wonder what the many young actors and actresses think when they read this sign at the entrance to this famous movie town? I wonder if they realize this center will one day be very good to them and the next day turn right around making them wish they had never heard of Hollywood?

No, I'm not complaining against this colony, so far it has been kind to me. It has taught me the meaning of serious work, made me like it and forget my foolish ambitions. Since arriving in this state, claimed by some as next to paradise, I have luckily been successful.

ROLE AT PLAYHOUSE

Five days after entering training, I was fortunate enough to win a major role at the famed Pasadena Playhouse. In the Claire Boothe comedy, "Kiss the Boys Goodbye," Lady Luck again smiled and the Los Angeles Daily News picked me as the outstanding young actor at the Playhouse. Immediately the studios got busy helping me visualize great things. The directors from all of the larger studios began telling me what a natural I was. If I had not been given some sound advise, I would have believed them. The chap who advised me is Oregon's own ace producer, Horace Robinson.

UPS AND DOWNS

Just to intimate how things can change here, let me tell a story. Joe Penner recently was about to make a picture. I was what the doctor had ordered, according to the casting director. Just think, I had only been here a very short while and now I was to be in a show with Joe Penner, even before I finished my course of training. Then Hollywood reached out and gave me its first slap. Finally it decided I was too young and wasn't the type after all. Hollywoodites wisely say never count on a job here until you hear the cameras grinding. You can take it straight from my shoulder that I am not looking forward to winning the Academy award this year.

Most impressive to me are the people who arrive in this land of back drops and false fronts as small town stars to find out this acting game is more than a way to pass time or show off for the home folks. They soon learn this place is not the same as you see on the screen, but a hard task-master calling for plenty of work. I have seen young girls and boys almost heart-broken by their failure to get a part in a show. Then, again, I've seen them receiving their first chance being made into different persons by a director's skillful handling.

Hollywood shows no favors. Every actor is treated the same, from the lowest extra to the highest paid star. The extras are funny folk. To see them in the street one would think they were the greatest of stars by their attire. Yet they are an integral part of this fascinating town.

It is no trouble to find out who is boss in Hollywood. The directors have the last word here. If they say to be on the set at eight a.m., it pays to be there. That goes for Spencer Tracy or Jessie Glick. It simply means you may be the idol of a million screen fans but you are just another actor to the director.

I am getting ready for a good role in George Raft's musical movie, "Dark Town Strutters Ball." This show is to feature the Mills Brothers, "Stuff" Smith's orchestra, and F. E. Miller of the radio. Immediately after this show, I will have another to make for Universal called "Kiss the Boys Goodbye," which is being converted from a play.

As I said before, I am not going to plan on seeing myself in either until I hear the cameras grinding.

Gaily-clad Bob Gino Whitefield created vivid drama in Eugene O'Neill's "Emperor Jones" last year. Known as "Smokey" to the campus citizenry, he changed the appellation to "Smoki" upon hitting Hollywood.

Keeper of the Keys

By RAY SCHRICK, '43

"Like father, like son" is a trite expression that with years of usage has been discarded. "Like son, like father," however, is a more unique phrase that is personified by Jack Cossman, Oregon's night watchman who for almost 20 years now has been working on the University campus.

His instance of coming to Eugene is not exactly the same as that of an ordinary student—Jack's life has been that of a sideline spectator rather than an active participant in the every day run of college life. In his years here he has filled up a store house of experiences backgrounding changes on the Oregon campus far surpassing that of the average student.

Yes, and Jack can tell stories and memories of these early times: of days when football used to be played on Kincaid field which was located where Chapman hall now stands, stories of 1924 when fire destroyed a portion of the University campus, and adventures of his three sons who as students did far more than the average share of carrying away school honors.

"A lot of things have happened since those early days, all right," Jack affirmed during a recent conversation. And then he recreated some of the pictures that used to be the every-day part of school life, telling the event of his arrival at the University.

"I used to be a blacksmith," Jack related. "That was in the days when automobiles were still rather scarce. My shop was in Creswell, and I moved to Eugene to start work as janitor in 1920. At that time Prince Campbell was president here, and Bezdek was football coach—the one who had led the Oregon team to the 1916 Rose Bowl game against Harvard.

"Most outstanding event of those first years for me was the fire in 1924 that started in the belfry of the women's gym and cleaned out all except one of the journalism shacks. Many of the surrounding houses also caught on fire. This happened when I was working in Villard hall."

A short while after that Jack was made night watchman. In that job he has worked for over ten years without missing a single day except during his wife's illness and one two-week stretch after twisting a knee while on duty. Jack asserts he has never been actually sick a single day of his life. All of these early years Jack talks about in a friendly way; his favorite subjects, however, are his three sons.

"Jim," he explained, "came to Oregon in 1911. He was 15 years of age and at that time the youngest freshman ever to enter college. Jim entered the University weighing 130 pounds; he went out with the record of weighing over 230."

That isn't exactly all of the story, either, for Jim was center on the 1916 football team, and worked along with Sny Huntington and "Anse" Cornell in the days of those great teams. The next brother, Leo, was hardly any less of a campus figure.

"Leo won first prize of $150 while here," Jack reminisced, "for having 21 hours of straight A work. He also threw the javelin and was one of Bill Hayward's early track men."

Both sons stand over six feet in height and there was a third brother, Henry, of a comparative footage. Henry was a drum major in 1927, but died October 9, 1929, as the result of an accident while working as state policeman in Washington.

Of the two living sons, Jim is head of the physical education department at Santa Monica Junior college, and Leo has taught at the Woodland California Union high school for the past 17 years.

In the years since his sons left Oregon, Jack has seen the campus almost double in size. Condon hall, Chapman, Commerce, McArthur court, and other buildings have risen, and four different men have come and gone as University president.

Jack has kept campus law and order for more years than most people, students at least, can remember. And yet, he still doesn't think of retiring. Jack wants to keep growing with Oregon.

New Greek Pledges

Forty-six co-eds and 36 men were pledged to sororities and fraternities during winter term.

Included among the sororities are Alpha Chi Omega: Gracia Barrigar, Dolores Davidson, Susan Falkell, Lois Hulser, Virginia LeFors, Gayle Loftin; Alpha Delta Pi: Joyce Freed, Dorothy Jane Gullette, Betty Jeanne Pratt; Alpha Gamma Delta: Lois Hamm, Elaine Gray, Maxine R. Klinge, Eileen Percy, Watrine Spencer; Alpha Omicron Pi: Irene Bailor, Phyllis L. Bryan, Bettie J. Fletcher, Doris J. Taylor.

Alpha Phi: Jean Campbell, Adele Can-

Yasui in Law Work

Minoru Yasui, B.A. '37, L.L.B. '39, is the first attorney of Japanese descent practicing in the State of Oregon. Gifted as a speaker, the bespectacled son of a Hood River merchant is a member of Sigma Delta Psi, Cosmopolitan club, Phi Beta Kappa and a second lieutenant of infantry in the U. S. Army Reserve corps.

A recent Sunday issue of the Oregonian carried Yasui's article, "We, Too, Please, Are 100 Per Cent Americans," relating the story of Japanese people living in this state. The young attorney explained the difficulty encountered by Oregon Japanese because of the current war in the Orient, the adaptability of second generation citizens to American life, and the pride which the Japanese people show in the building of Oregon.

The versatile graduate is practicing law in Portland, but will move to Chicago in June to enter the Japanese consular service in that city.

Chancellor Speaks

Chancellor Frederick M. Hunter spoke before enthusiastic audiences in Lakeview and Klamath Falls last month summarizing what the State System of Higher Education was doing for the people.

Combined groups of Oregon State and Oregon alumni attended the dinners at Hunters Hot Springs in Lakeview and Willard hotel in Klamath Falls. Forrest E. Cooper, '27, J.D. '28, acted as toastmaster in Lakeview. John H. Houston, '21, made arrangements for the Klamath Falls dinner and was its co-toastmaster.

Warren Reid of Corvallis and Elmer Fansett of Eugene attended with the Chancellor as representatives of their respective alumni associations.

Night watchman Jack Cossman tells writer Schrick of sports events which were once played where Chapman hall now stands. This scene shows the Underclass Mix at Kincaid field, November 1924

From Howe to Hollis

By PORTER T. "PAT" FRIZZELL, '40

Bruce Hamby's Athletic News bureau assistant, Porter T. "Pat" Frizzell, writes this article after a study of impressions on the Pacific Coast conference "Atherton" rules. Alluding to "legal eagles," Pat reveals Professor Orlando John Hollis, B.S. '26, J.D. '28, who accumulated a scholastic record probably the highest ever achieved in the history of the University. A member of the Eugene water board, Phi Beta Kappa keyman Professor Hollis serves on innumerable faculty committees, athletic and educational activities boards, is famed for his exacting statements.—Ed.

When the Pacific Coast conference was formed back in 1915, it probably never occurred to the founders that some day it might take lawyers to run the organization.

But apparently the "legal eagles" are necessary now, if the present intricate system of eligibility and ineligibility rules is to be capably interpreted. The conference put Edwin N. Atherton, sometimes known as the G-Man, to work more than two years ago, and G-Man Atherton made a two-million word report from which the conference officials doped out a purification code that even a Philadelphia lawyer would have difficulty in fully interpreting.

Thus the University of Oregon's new faculty representative in the conference, Professor Orlando J. Hollis of the Law School, seems to be the right man for the spot.

HOLLIS ONE OF THREE

Professor Hollis isn't the only lawyer among conference faculty representatives, and indications are that before long the position of faculty representative may be open to law instructors only. The University of Washington has named Professor Nottelman, a law man, as its faculty representative, and Professor Owens, the Stanford representative, is a lawyer.

Oregon's faculty representative for 28 years, Herbert Crombie Howe, resigned in February because of ill health. Lawyer Hollis was immediately appointed to succeed Howe by President Erb. Professor Hollis has been active in campus extra-curricular affairs since joining the Law School faculty at Oregon in 1931. He is a member of the Educational Activities board and last year was chairman of a faculty committee working for a Student Union building on the campus. He was graduated from the University in 1926, 25 years after Professor Howe began his long teaching career in the English department.

FORTY YEARS AT OREGON

Howe was graduated from Cornell in 1896 and came to Oregon in 1901, almost 40 years ago. He always has been a friend of athletes and of all persons interested in sports. He has known personally almost every varsity football, basketball and baseball player to wear the lemon-yellow and green during this century.

Seldom has Professor Howe missed an Oregon athletic contest. For 15 years he virtually never missed a football practice, let alone a game. But failing health has forced "the man in the green eyeshade" to give up his extra work. Professor Howe will continue his teaching duties remaining a friend of athletes and athletics with unofficial interest.

Before 1915 Professor Howe was a faculty representative in the old Northwest conference. He remembers well the great Webfoot football teams of 1916 and 1919 and the championship basketball teams of 1919, 1926 and 1927. Such men as Johnny Parsons, Johnny Kitzmiller, Shy Huntington, Bill Steers and Bill Morgan studied under Professor Howe and were advised by him.

Professor Howe was on hand when the Atherton rules were worked out by the conference and was to act as Oregon's interpreter. Now Professor Hollis takes over that difficult duty. The job of a faculty representative is not one of glory, but rather of hard work. The position brings no return other than personal satisfaction of accomplishment.

The Atherton investigation, during which the G-Man visited all conference schools and carried on careful discussions with scores of athletes, then filed all cases, took about two years. It was clothed in the utmost secrecy. And it cost the Pacific Coast conference a tidy sum.

RULES VOLUMINOUS

Unquestionably the aim was in the right direction—toward clarifying what shall be allowed and what shall not in the way of proselyting and subsidizing, and toward putting the eight member schools on an equal footing in the matter of attracting athletes.

But the trouble with the Atherton code, which has already been in effect for several months but may not have definite repercussions for some time, is that its wording is rather vague and that apparently its "mustn'ts" have loopholes in them.

In the subsidization field there are numerous regulations. Athletes are prohibited from receiving any sort of aid in the way of scholarships or loans that is not open to all students, athletes or non-athletes. It is specified that athletic participation shall not be a condition for receiving grants in aid for the payment of tuition from funds "received by the institution."

Parts of the Atherton code seem to be repetitions of previous regulations or precedents. Others of its rules are new and indefinite. Oregon, like other conference schools, will attempt to live up to the code, but are the rules concrete enough to bring about any changes? Will eligibility squabbles arise?

Law Professor Hollis will help decide.

Ex-Prexy Marries

Miss Gayle Buchanan, '38, president of Associated Women Students in 1937-38, was married February 11th to Don W. Karshner of Aberdeen, Wash.

The event was solemnized by Dean Victor P. Morris, '15, M.A. '20, School of Business Administration at the Eugene home of Miss Buchanan's parents. Assisting in the breakfast that followed were the bride's three sisters. They are Miss Kate Buchanan, '27, housemother of Susan Campbell hall; Mrs. Bernard Young, '30, of Portland; and Miss Kee Buchanan, '25, of Lebanon.

A member of Kappa Kappa Gamma and Mortar Board, Mrs. Karshner has spent the last two years studying at Stanford and teaching at Pomona college. Mr. Karshner is a graduate of Washington State with a teaching fellowship at Stanford. Their address is 1220 College Ave., Palo Alto, Calif.

English department's Professor H. C. Howe resigns from Coast conference "labor of love."

The Greeks Had a Word for It

By SPEECH PROF
and UNDERGRAD

Handsome Professor Walfred A. Dahlberg is serving his seventh year in the University speech department as director of symposium work. From miner to railroader to high school teacher to radio announcer to professor runs his working itinerary. Dubbed "Wallie" by many, the Friendly hall resident is Oregon's newly appointed Inter-fraternity council permanent secretary. John Dewey's discussion methods and Abe Lincoln's humorous stories are his pet conversational projects. Love for out-of-doors makes him a staunch Oregonian.—Ed.

Debate, war and football have their rallying cry, "Down with your adversary!" The terminology is in all cases the same: fight, clash, squads, offensive strategy, defensive strategy, win, lose, penalties, and so on ad infinitum.

It is amusing to hear that the debater, armed with such a jargon, is, withal, in search of truth. Apparently the truth comes only after men have fought, bled and been carried away. One might well imagine a scientist in his laboratory using strategy on atoms and molecules and finally getting them on the horns of a dilemma. For in his case, too, truth is the objective.

ARGUE AGAINST ARGUMENTS

Now and then a debate coach (not a director) will shift his ground and hold that the objective is to give students platform experience, in which case one might ask, "Why, then, select such weighty subjects for discussion?" He might better subscribe to the Oxford technique and harangue on the topic.

"Resolved, That Work is the Ruination of the Drinking Classes."

Whatever the argument, the University of Oregon decided that William E. Gladstone had a point when he observed, "the man who asks of his adversary's contention, 'Is it true?' is a lost debater. The debater does not ask, 'Is it true?' He asks, 'What will my answer be to his contention?' How can I most surely floor him?"

OREGON'S SYSTEM

Working on that implied suggestion we decided to:

1. Eliminate the "win" motive in our speech program.
2. Provide realistic audiences for the students rather than persist in having them debate in empty college halls.
3. Encourage an impartial study of the controversial issues of the day.
4. Discourage the idea that issues are strictly bi-lateral, when actually there are as many sides to an issue as there are personal interpretations of it.
5. Employ John Dewey's problem-solving technique in this particular field.
6. Create situations in which the audiences as well as the speakers could participate.

INTERESTING RESULTS

As a result of this change the University has gotten some interesting results. Last year, for example, 35 students spoke before 100 audiences out in the State on issues that were extremely real to the people of Oregon. Granges, churches, schools, chambers of commerce, service and Oregon Alumni clubs were included on our program. And all who participated sensed, for the first time, the true meaning of speech education.

We now believe with Disraeli that, "Contests and wars are never solutions. The scientist, for example, does not say, 'This conflicts with my issue,—how can I refute it?' He says, rather, 'This is new and interesting. I shall study its full possibilities'."

AWS to Play Host

Oregon's women students will entertain 300 delegates from 112 western colleges and universities April 15th to 17th.

The conference of Associated Women Students' organizations will stress the need for good citizenship in college administration. Their topic will be "Women in Democracy," according to Oregon's dean of women, Mrs. Hazel P. Schwering. She is faculty chairman of the conference and Miss Anne Fredericksen, retiring president of Oregon's AWS group, will be student chairman.

Speakers will include such Oregon notables as Governor Charles E. Sprague, Chancellor F. M. Hunter, Dr. Donald M. Erb and Mrs. Sheldon Sackett of the state board of higher education.

Gordon Picked

Joe Gordon, '39, was included in the lineup of all-star baseball teams which played benefit games March 17th for Finnish relief funds.

He was one of the nine picked by unanimous choice of 46 Baseball Writers' association members. Originally with the class of '36, the Yankee star received his B.S. in physical education at Oregon last year.

Alumni Membership

Membership in the University of Oregon Alumni Association is open to all persons who have completed work for credit at the University.

Meetings of the organization are called semi-annually at Homecoming and Commencement. Elective and staff officials are Dr. Del Stanard, president; Hollis N. Johnston, vice-president; Elmer C. Faussett, secretary-treasurer; Roy Vernstrom, editor of OLD OREGON.

Portland Banquet

Plans for a Portland Alumni banquet April 18 were made recently in a meeting of the Portland officers with Elmer Faussett, Alumni secretary. General chairman will be Don McCormick, '30. His co-chairman will be Harry Weston, '39.

The banquet will be the scene of annual elections. Present Portland officers are Roland Davis, '28, Dr. Merl Margason, '23, Kelsey Slocum, '32, and Mrs. E. Murray Burns, '28.

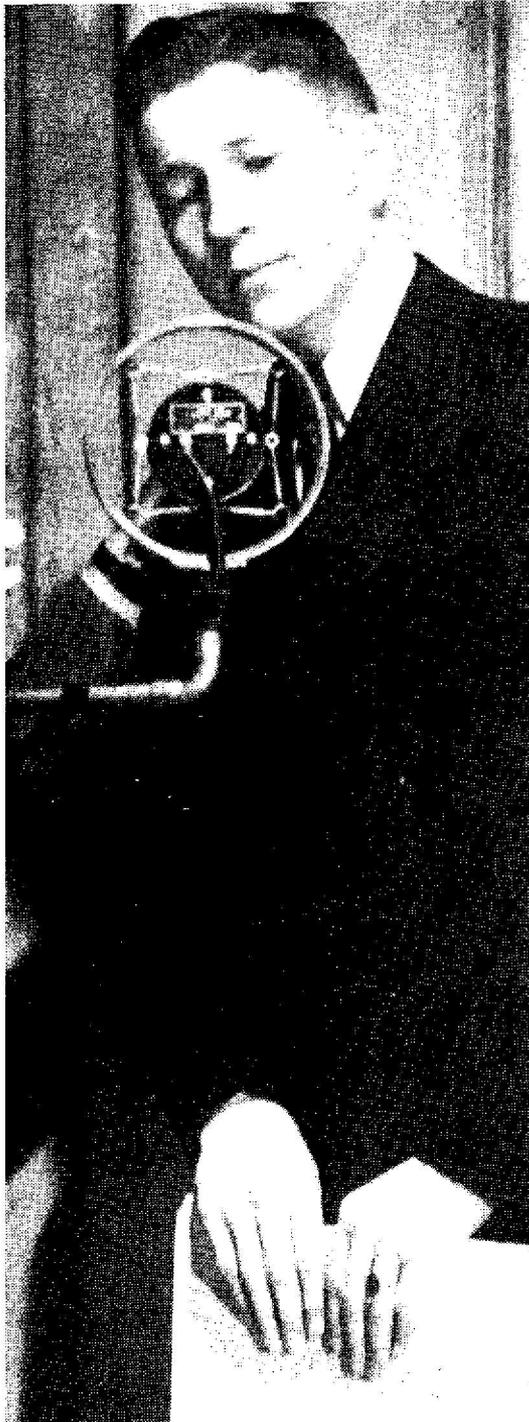

Once a WJR announcer in Detroit, Speech Prof symposium students such as Ken Erickson. T) ation

Arrangements for the banquet will be made by Ray Mize, '36. Other committee appointments will be announced later this month, according to President Davis and Secretary Faussett.

DR W. A. DAHLBERG
E KEN A. ERICKSON

They Said "Symposium" Talks

Dahlberg finds radio engagements increasing for his other plays at Oregon will be given detailed explanation issue.

Clarence Coddling, ex-'35, and Raymond "Butch" Morse, ex-'34, will be co-chairmen in charge of attendance. Bill Pease, '38, former editor of OLD OREGON, will be responsible for publicity.

One of Portland's representatives in undergraduate symposium work at Oregon is a social science major interested in personnel work, Ken. A. Erickson. President of Campbell Co-op living organization, he gained fame last December when press associations published his willingness to sell certain Aaland island property "cheap" because bombs were bursting in Baltic waters. A junior, Ken is no academic slouch and relegates "canned" debate to the scrapheap in favor of Oregon's present system. He is a three-year veteran in speech tours.—Ed.

No debating at the University of Oregon? No intercollegiate competition against other debate squads?

Three years ago I wondered why. I knew there must be some reason for the supplanting of debate by symposium. Yet, as a freshman, I was doubtful and inwardly skeptical that symposium would ever supplant debate as far as I was concerned.

With such a mental set I attended my first symposium meeting. I still had visions of a debate coach telling me how to establish arguments which would rain "death blows" on my worthy opponents and how to launch attacks on the opposition's argument and thus fight him in his own country.

OPEN DISCUSSION

However, this vision did not materialize. Instead, I met in open discussion with other students on the topic that been chosen for the year. We studied the selected problem during fall term and attended a meeting each Wednesday with Professor Dahlberg to analyze the problem. In other words, we co-operatively sought for the truth and for the most logical solution to the problem.

After a term's research we began to build our talks on the history, problem and possible solutions of our topic. We did not set up our conclusions as the only right answers to the problem but left our findings open for further discussion and questioning wherever we spoke.

CO-OPERATIVE THINKING

The idea of co-operative thinking rather than competitive thinking soon gained favor with me. I realized that in most public questions there is more than two sides and that the solution often lies between the extremities of affirmative and negative. I came to agree with F. W. Robertson that, "Controversy (as in debate) destroys humble inquiry after truth, and throws all our energies into an attempt to prove ourselves right—a spirit in which no man gets at the truth." It became clearer to me why the principle of symposium had superseded that of debate at Oregon.

REALISTIC AUDIENCES

However, the practical experience of speaking before actual audiences is one of the strongest points in favor of the symposium type of discussion. Instead of working to bend the opinions of debate judges to our way of thinking, we present our discussion before civic service clubs, high schools, country granges and chambers of commerce. Consequently, a symposium speaker must learn to adapt himself to each different audience situation. His speech content also must be adaptable, for a talk that "goes over" well in a grange will probably "fall flat" at a chamber of commerce meeting. Such adaptation requires mental alertness where it is best learned—in real audience situations.

A student is further stimulated to clear and logical thought by the questions solicited and received from the audience after every program. Thus symposium sharpens the individual student's ability to think on his own feet.

The University gains publicity throughout the state for the symposium tours reach about 8,000 people a year. In fact it is often said that such programs help break down that tenacious belief some people still nurture that our state educational institutions are glorified country clubs. So symposium teams may be said to be good-will ambassadors for the University.

But the major benefit seems to accrue to the symposium student for he not only learns to meet all types of audience situations but he is shown the value of searching for truth co-operatively in contrast to fighting for a cause whether right or wrong. Symposium members believe with Macaulay that, "men are never so likely to settle a question rightly as when they discuss it freely."

Cuba Gets Article

University President Donald M. Erb will soon read his biography and see his picture in "La Revista America," an organ for writers and artists in Havana, Cuba.

George Godfrey of the University news bureau had Dr. Erb's biography translated into Spanish for the magazine. The request for information came from Pastor del Rio, director of the Review.

AAA School Birthday

Twenty-five years of growth will be celebrated by Oregon's School of Architecture and Allied Arts, April 2nd and 3rd.

Addresses by nationally famous authorities in the fields of art, exhibitions by students, faculty and alumni will be included in the two-day event. Dean Ellis F. Lawrence is its leader.

The Alumni Art league, an organization of former students, will participate. Robert Burk Morden, '36, a Portland architect, is its president.

The school with a national reputation now has eight departments and an enrollment of almost 300. Twenty-three serve on its teaching staff. Students enroll from every section of the United States.

Departments which will take part in the celebration include design, construction, landscape and interior in architecture, painting and drawing, sculpture, general art and normal art.

Maple Court Boss

By GEORGE PASERO, '40

Early this month, Oregon's Captain John Dick was named on the Madison Square Garden All-American basketball team by seven metropolitan coaches. Such men as Dick, Wally Johansen, Bobby Anet, Laddie Gale, "Slim" Wintermute, and others cited in this article, make countless thousands wonder what Coach Hobson possesses in personality and experience to build champions of both the maple court and the diamond.—Ed.

Few of the nation's basketball mentors can surpass, or even equal, the coaching record of Oregon's builder of champions, Howard A. "Hobby" Hobson.

In the 12 years he has been teaching the hoop game, his teams have won 251 contests and lost only 82 for an all-time percentage of 75.37—three victories out of every four games played. For the past four years, since he has been at Oregon, playing outstanding teams throughout the nation, he has piloted his Webfoot teams to 111 victories and only 45 defeats a .7115 percentage. Under his guidance, Oregon teams have twice won Northern division championships and last year also won both the Pacific coast and National Inter-collegiate titles.

IMMORTAL '39 SQUAD

Peer of all his athletic creations, naturally, was last year's great Oregon national championship team. Already immortal in Oregon memory, the champions of 1939, first NCAA titlists, swept everything before them as they marched over the nation's hoop trails, from New York to California and Ohio State to Washington.

Manned by all-American's Laddie Gale, Slim Wintermute, and Bobby Anet, all-coast Wally Johansen, all-West John Dick, and Ted Sarpola, Matt Pavalunas, Bob Hardy, Ford Mullen, Earl Sandness and Red McNeceley, the 1939 Oregon quintet played 34 games, winning 29.

Spectacular and stirring, to say the least, was the Champions' powerful windup to their title campaign. Oregon fans well recall how, rebounding from a 50 to 31 setback at the hands of the Oregon State Beavers, they turned on the power to outrace Oregon State, Washington (twice), California (twice), Texas, Oklahoma and finally Ohio State, the Eastern winner.

TOUGH ASSIGNMENT

At the outset of the 1940 season, the mild-mannered, debonair Hobson was faced with a tough assignment of building a successor to the national championship winner. On hand for duty was John Dick of the 1939 regulars. Hobson settled to his task, experimented with different lineups, came up with a team that was good enough to take second place in the Northern division to Oregon State.

This team—composed of Hank Anderson and Archie Marshik, six-foot-seven giants; Captain John Dick, the veteran; "Stonewall" Paul Jackson and Vic "Slick" Townsend—won 10 of 16 conference games and nine of 15 pre-season contests. Included in the pre-season victories were four which were taken on the second annual barnstorming trip through the East.

MADISON SQUARE SHOW

Highlight of the Eastern trek was the Duck's Madison Square Garden appearance. Playing before some 18,000 spectators in the evening's feature game, Coach Hobby's boys lost an overtime thriller to much-touted Long Island university, 56 to 55.

Hobson entered the coaching profession in 1926 after a brilliant career at Oregon. He was captain and all-star choice on both the '25 and '26 basketball and baseball teams.

Hobby's early coaching experience was gained at Kelso, Wash. high school. After two seasons there he dropped out of coaching for a year to attend Columbia university and earn his master's degree in physical education.

PORTLAND HIGH COACH

While at Columbia, he played with the Montclair Athletic club basketball team in the Eastern Athletic league and led the team in scoring. He also played second base with the Brooklyn Bushwicks in 1929.

The year of 1929-30, Hobson was head football and baseball coach at Cortland State Teachers' college in New York.

Returning to the west coast, Hobson spent two seasons at Benson Polytechnic in Portland, producing two city championship teams. In 1933 he went to Southern Oregon College of Education, where his colorful teams won 68 and lost only 15 games in three years of competition with larger coast schools.

Hobson's four seasons at Oregon have seen the Webfoots rise to top national ranking. That is why he is called "builder of champions." His first Oregon team finished fourth in the northern division. The following year he led a sophomore team to a tie for the division title. In the play-offs, with Washington State and Washington, Oregon lost to WSC, the ultimate winner.

In 1937-38, Oregon won the Northern title, only to lose to Stanford for the coast crown in a hard-fought two-game series at Palo Alto. His 1938-39 quintet is ranked as the greatest ever developed in the Pacific Northwest, and some great teams have come out of this region, witness the Howard A. Hobson's basketball and baseball squads are first-raters. Hobby's hobby is teaching good sportsmanship to athletes.

1935 Washington club which almost won Olympic honors.

This team of Hobby's swept to the northern division title with only two setbacks in 16 games. For the first time since 1919, the Webfoots annexed the Pacific coast conference championship by defeating California in two straight games in Eugene.

Hobson not only has produced outstanding teams at Oregon but equally outstanding individual performers. All-Americans Laddie Gale and Slim Wintermute have been playing professional basketball as regulars for the league-leading Detroit Eagles this year. Bobby Anet and Wally Johansen have led an independent team, Rubensteins of Eugene, to a state A.A.U. title.

The youthful mentor also directs the Oregon baseball team, and in the past four years has won two championships. He has sent several Webfoot diamond graduates into professional ranks, including six members of the 1939 nine.

At Oregon, Hobson has always taught colorful, fast-moving, action-filled basketball. He is the section's leading exponent of the run-'em-to-death game. His recent Collier's article, "Two-Fisted Champions," tells how Oregon plays basketball the slam-bang, race-horse way.

Webfoot fans still remember and chuckle at his reply last season when asked to pick his Northern division all-star team. "That's easy," said Hobson. "I'll take the entire Oregon team." Yes, and so would a host of other hoop coaches. That is, if they could have had those Oregon champions.

History in Your Attic?

The University of Oregon Library would welcome any material dealing with student life—printed programs, class minutes, photographs of former students—for inclusion in its new, commodious files.

VALUABLE historical data may be stored in your attic—long forgotten. You may have old textbooks, yellowed newspapers, maps with boundary lines of forgotten significance. Material printed in Oregon prior to the year 1880 is in current demand at this library.

M. H. DOUGLASS
Librarian

CONTRIBUTIONS by Oregon Alumni of such historical material is welcomed for temporary loan or as a gift for the future use of our students. Mr. Douglass would greatly appreciate your co-operation in helping to build a fine collection of printed and manuscript material.

Such Contributions Will Be Placed on Exhibit During Our Celebration of

Third Annual Library Day, May 3, 1940
