OLD OREGON surveys indicate personal news notes about you, and your school chums, are read with special interest by all Old Oregon readers.

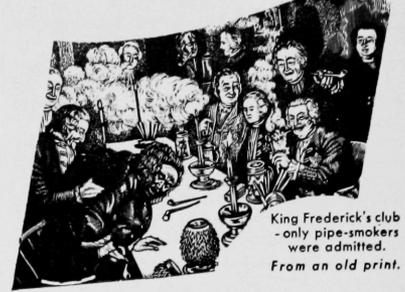

We are pleased with the growing volume of the letters and notes from alums, students, and friends of the University, which enables us to tell all our readers about you and your friends.

Several other news sources are used in reporting the special news notes about University alums, students and other U of O personalities.

Results have been gratifying: The December, 1944 Old Oregon published 91 notes under "News of the Classes." This school year's December issue ran 108 (that does not include Current Classes"—a new feature.) January's 1945 issue carried 78 items under "News of the Classes" and this year's January issue had 108.

University Student Union Plans Progress

PLANS have now been readied to appoint the general chairman of the forthcoming drive for Donald M. Erb Memorial Union contributions, it was announced January 20 by the central student union planning committee. The drive, slated to start rolling in March, will be partially financed by an appropriation of $5000 made by the University Holding Company. Crystallization of the plan to name a campaign chairman is virtually the last of the many long steps leading to the actual raising of funds for construction of the student union building.

Dr. Will V. Norris, supervising engineer for the project, has revealed that not only the financial plans are in final phase. Referring to the design of the building itself, he said, "Preliminary plans for the Erb Memorial Union are practically complete."

In blueprinting plans to include the appointment of the campaign chairman, the central planning committee discussed fundamental policies to be followed, and prospective candidates for chairman were named. The man finally chosen will be a prominent Oregonian, preferably an alumnus of the University.

The decisions made thus far are but the beginning of the committee's task. It will have to determine policy and settle all the questions and problems arising in bringing the long dreamed of building into reality.

New York Guest...

Dr. Harry K. Newburn, University of Oregon president, returned from the East last month where he was on institution business. He was entertained as a popular guest of honor by New York alums.

Written for Old Oregon
By ARTHUR RUDD, '24

A SCORE of transplanted Oregonians gathered at the Hotel Roosevelt in New York, January 6, to get acquainted with the University's new president, Dr. Harry K. Newburn.

After a cordial introduction by Allen Eaton, '02, who organized the luncheon meeting, President Newburn discussed the present status of the University of Oregon, including some figures on enrollment trends, and the problems involved in the return to the campus of the veterans. His listeners were especially interested in the cooperative efforts in Eugene to provide temporary quarters for married veterans.

The president presented an outline of the building program on the campus with particular reference to the Donald M. Erb Memorial Student Union. Several guests at the luncheon were on the campus at the time the student union drive was launched and the opinion was expressed that it is high time that something be done to provide this important addition to student life. President Newburn felt that the New York alumni might well play a significant part in the raising of funds for the memorial.

SPONTANEOUS applause greeted the speaker when he said that the first objective of his administration would be to secure and retain top-flight educators for faculty posts.

"The degree to which we are able to keep our good men and the success we meet in attracting outstanding men to the University will determine largely whether we are to make a really significant contribution to the life of the state of Oregon and the nation. For what makes a great institution, as you well know, is to have great souls walking across the campus and directing the learning and living of the students. It is to this end that we are most earnestly

University Acts To Ease Acute Living Situation

Written for Old Oregon by
JO ANN MATHES, '49

WITH enrollment skyrocketing since the beginning of fall term and with more prospective students turning in registration applications every day, the campus housing situation has reached an acute state unprecedented in University history.

At the beginning of fall term, registration applications numbered a 20% increase over the preceding year and adequate housing preparations had been made on that basis. The war's end however, caused an advance wave of returning veterans, a third of whom are married, and enrollment jumped to a 47% increase.

Several projects to take care of the overflow were immediately cleared through the state legislature by the University and many are already completed.

Winter term enrollment is up 80% over the corresponding term in 1945, but again the University is taking steps to secure additional housing. Persons planning on entering school are asked to make advance applications for housing. As more projects are completed, persons who have applied will be notified that there is a place for them.

AMONG the projects already in use by the students are fifty trailer houses, leased from the government and brought from Troutdale, Oregon, at University expense, which are installed at the east end and north side of the tennis courts, on E. 14th and Agate streets. They are equipped with oil heaters, water, electricity, and sanitary facilities. All the trailers are occupied with four more expected to arrive on campus in about a week according to E. M. Pallett, UO executive secretary. Rental charge for the trailers is $25 a month plus a small charge necessary to make the payments due, in lieu of taxes, which are required by the FPHA.

The situation has also been eased somewhat this term by the opening of eight fraternity houses on campus which provide living quarters for 255 men students.

The University has leased 40 housing units back of Skinner's Butte. The apartments, formerly NYA quarters, are now occupied by veterans and their families. The University has no investment in these units, it was pointed out by Dr. Harry Newburn, University president, and any profits from rentals will be turned over to the FPHA. The apartments, one, two, and three bedroom units, are furnished and heated.

TWO buildings on campus have been partially converted into dormitories for unmarried students. The third floor of Geringer hall has been built to accommodate 36 women. It provides a separate dresser and closet for each girl as well as lounging, bathing, and studying facilities. Villard hall's second floor has been remade to house 80 men. Each student has his own dresser and closet, and a sleeping porch, four study

UO Enrollment Continues to Skyrocket; Registrar Predicts Further Increase

CLIFFORD L. CONSTANCE
Assistant Registrar

BIG news in enrollment, since the report in the November Old Oregon, is the sudden winter term surge of increase. Not since 1919 has there been a winter term enrollment that was larger than the preceding fall term.

The present winter term already has seen the enrollment of 550 students, or nearly 20%, more than last fall term. We must anticipate another increase for spring term, which will make it the largest spring term in the history of the University. That will climax a phenomenal resurgence in two years from the spring of 1944 when fewer than 300 civilian men were left on the campus.

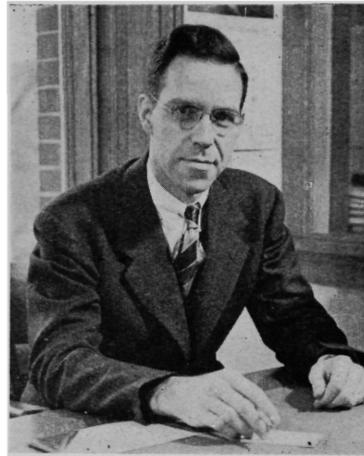

The accompanying statistical table reveals how far along enrollment has already moved to the pre-war peak. Most significantly, it begins to reveal the new picture of the post-war University of Oregon. Note that in six categories, enrollment has already attained new peaks, the foothills of the post-war profile embracing at least 5,000 students. Right now enrollment is only two percent below its all time peak. The enrollment of women has continued to increase with only a minor recession during the war, but with the aid of the G.I. Bill, the enrollment of men is speedily moving toward the lead once more.

AND what is now our current situation as to veterans? There are least 1164 men and 28 women veterans of World War II now registered on the campus. Each week brings letters and applications from dozens more, both former University students and new entries. Four hundred and sixty-four of the current 1192 veterans had never attended the University before this term. Tentatively, the GI's seem to be doing a satisfactory job as students. Their fall term grade point average was above the all-men average and the number who dropped out at the end of fall term was proportionately almost identical with non-veterans.

The University of Oregon will be transformed into a much larger university. Some of her face and spirit has already changed. The trailer houses adjoining the tennis courts, the prefabricated houses across from Hayward field, on Emerald street and elsewhere, the whole blueprint of student union and dormitories and academic buildings—these will change her appearance to even the most casual glance.

Many procedures, such as registration, which handle the whole mass of students will be speeded and mechanized. But, this pressure of numbers will compel analysis, too, of our existing rules and requirements which now may have inadequate validity in educational profits. So, if we forget the intimacy of "Hello Lane," we may rediscover some other sound values.

Of course, no building program can move fast enough to house all the students who will want to attend the University in the next few terms. Therefore, admission is being refused to inferior, non-veteran applicants from outside of Oregon. Also University students with unsatisfactory scholastic records are being required to speed up the removal of their deficiencies if they are to remain in school.

We hope to have enough housing to accommodate all acceptable applicants from now on. Careful integration of housing with admission procedures will assure priority of housing facilities to those who clear their admission or return to the University at the earliest possible time. Part of our problem is to circulate up-to-the-minute information on our changing facilities and procedures. Alumni, students and faculty can all help by discrediting rumors and by urging interested friends to write or come to the campus and find out the facts.

Through Old Oregon and other media we will attempt to keep you posted on our postwar progress.

Dr. Beall Leaves UO To Teach at Princeton

Dr. Chandler B. Beall, University of Oregon professor of Romance languages, is serving as visiting professor at Princeton University for six months. The position, a tribute to the Oregon professor, was offered to Dr. Beall in the spring and he left last month to take up his duties. He teaches graduate courses in French literature.

Dr. Clarence E. Bollermann, University of Oregon Dental School graduate, died January 2 in Los Angeles. Dr. Bollermann had been a dentist in Los Angeles since 1913.

Roy O. Burnett, Jr., '37, was recently discharged from the navy after five years of service as a fighter pilot. Burnett is vice-president in charge of sales for the Roy Burnett Motors, Inc., Portland. Craig P. Povey, '39, has also been discharged from the navy after five years of service. He is salesmanager of the same company. Burnett and Povey are going to be in charge of the plane division of the company.

THE University of Oregon department of chemistry was recently notified of its accreditation by the American Chemical society. The department was reinstated in the University in 1942 after a ten-year period during which no upper-class or graduate work in science was offered.

Department staff members are Dr. Pierre Van Rysellberghe, professor of chemistry; Dr. J. M. McGee, acting associate professor of chemistry; Dr. C. H. Secoy, assistant professor of chemistry; Nils Carlsen, custodian; and Dr. A. H. Kunz, head of the department.

Dwight Caswell, '43, has been promoted to lieutenant in the navy and is with the naval research lab in Washington, D.C. Mrs. Caswell is the former Helen Rayburn, '45.

Music Dean Back on Campus

DR. Theodore Kratt, dean of the school of music at the University of Oregon and director of music for the Oregon state system of higher education returned to the campus last month after six months of teaching in the Shrivvenham-American university in England.

Dean Kratt was appointed by the war department to conduct classes in music and to serve as choral and instrumental conductor in the university study centers to be used by the army. "Shrivvenham is a small English village near Oxford and an ideal set-up for a university," exclaimed Dean Kratt.

"In addition to certain administrative responsibilities, I taught two large classes in appreciation of music, and one in history of music. I assisted with the directing of the instrumental and choral organization. A radio on the post enabled us to broadcast our concerts throughout the United Kingdom and to the continent."

APPROXIMATELY 400 students were enrolled in music courses, and these men were well selected. There were students there from every state in the union. These fellows were definitely more interested in classical music than our jive," he added. "They wanted to express themselves in music."

Dean Kratt smilingly added that some of the better students may show up at the University of Oregon and he had taken advantage of the opportunities in this connection. "We had a football and basketball team, and all the rest," he said.

Music and other arts have become important in England's pattern of living, Dr. Kratt exclaimed. Even in the family life in England, music has become an intimate part of living. Army transportation made it possible for him to get around England a great deal. He made frequent trips to Oxford and spent considerable time in the university libraries.

During his stay in the British Isles he covered England "from one end to the other," spending four days in London as the guest of the education division of the British army during which he gave a series of lectures on music to British military personnel.

THROUGH the U. S. Embassy, he was invited, together with a small group of representatives of the allied countries to attend the final two concerts of the Promenade Series in Royal Albert Hall, a part of the big Thanksgiving and Victory Celebration in London. After the concert they were entertained at a dinner party where they had the pleasure of meeting Sir Adrian Boult, Vaughan Williams, and William Walton.

Dr. Kratt, through the facilities of "temporary duty" of the army had the opportunity to do some special study at both Cambridge and Oxford.

Just before his return to Oregon, he met Dr. Harry K. Newburn, university president, in New York where they discussed school plans.

The tall maestro expressed his happiness at being back on the campus. He is "exceedingly pleased" with the school of music and the fine work done by John Stehn, acting dean during his absence.

ON THE CAMPUS

A HUNDRED and forty Webfoot scholars made up the University fall term honor roll, published last month. To be placed on the honor roll, a student must make a grade point of 3.5 or above. Included in the hundred and forty were eighteen students with a perfect four point average.

Instead of "Hello, how are you?" as in the old days, one is greeted on the campus these days with, "Say, know anyone who has a room to spare?" The sudden, extremely acute housing shortage caused by an influx of registrants this term has made it impossible for many returning students, principally veterans, to register. The upper floors of both Gerlinger and Villard halls have been converted into dormitories to take some of the overflow.

"The Music Box Ball" furnished the theme for the Senior Ball this year, held January 6 in McArthur court. Art Holman's orchestra provided the music for this first big social event of winter term. Mary Margaret Ellsworth, as general chairman of the dance, held to the theme with glistening musical notes as decorations hanging over the orchestra which was set up in the center of the floor.

THE Salzedo ensemble, a combination of two harpists, a cellist, and a flutist, presented a concert in McArthur court January 10. The event was staged through the auspices of the Eugene Civic Music Association and was part of their regular concert series.

Date books, dusty from lack of use during the past few years, are again being opened and filled by all the women's living organizations on campus. The number of men registered has risen until there is now a ratio of $\frac{7}{8}$ of a man to every woman. With the men, the social life of house dances, open houses, desserts, and campus dances have returned to the college scene.

College life with both its serious and lighter sides is being shown to the radio audience every Wednesday night from 9:00 to 9:30 when Campus Headlines, an all campus radio show, is aired over radio stations KEX and KOAC. The program includes music, skits, and interviews so as to cover all phases of college life.

DHI THETA Upsilon, junior women's honorary, has announced the awarding of four scholarships to be given before the end of the school year. Funds for the scholarships have been earned by the group which ushers at all campus sports events.

The University of Oregon extension division, in order to meet the interests and needs of increased registration, is offering regular college courses in art, education, industrial arts, music, Spanish, Russian, commerce, and sociology.

In an effort to curb the recent flu epidemic, the University health service has made influenza vaccinations available to all members of the student body. With only slight after effects, the shots have been very popular, especially with veterans who had had them while in the service.

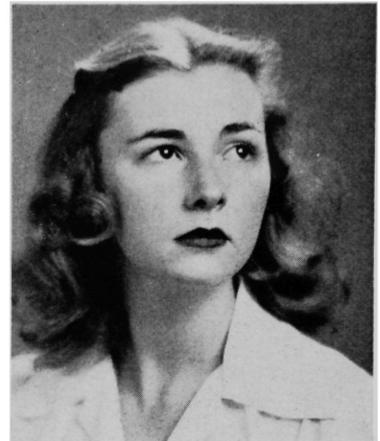

THE Oregon Federation of Collegiate Leaders held their seventh annual convention at the University in January. Campus leaders from 14 institutions were invited to the two-day meeting to exchange ideas on student government on the college campus.

The case of Puddles' disappearance is closed, but not solved. Puddles, Oregon's webfooted, slick-feathered mascot, disappeared from the Portland home of his guardian, Jim McClintock during the Christmas holidays. While McClintock hunted frantically, the only clues that were forthcoming were several cards and telegrams mentioning Puddles and expressing sarcastic regret at his loss. Then, suddenly, just before an Oregon-Oregon State game, Puddles arrived in Eugene via the railway express. No explanation for the incident has as yet been found.

From a Class in 1912 to a School in 1946; A Success Story in Journalism

Written for Old Oregon by
DORIS SPEAROW, '47

Top—A journalism class learns copyreading. Center—Journalism students are taught the rudiments of printing as a part of their professional training. Bottom—President Newburn is interviewed by members of the reporting class. With the camera is Leonard "Bud" Jermain, instructor in journalism, former Emerald editor who graduated in 1940.

IN THE Spring of 1912, President Prince L. Campbell of the University of Oregon wrote to Eric W. Allen, then a young news editor on the Seattle Post-Intelligencer, requesting that he come down to the University of Oregon for a conference on a local journalistic problem. President Campbell was so favorably impressed with Allen that he asked him to return in September to start a department of journalism. And so it was that the study of journalism commenced on the University campus in the fall of 1912—almost simultaneously with the founding of the Pulitzer school of journalism, at Columbia University.

The first class met in the Northwest corner room of McClure hall basement. Among those first students were Karl Onthank, then editor of the Emerald and present dean of personnel administration at the University; Carlton Spencer, professor of law at the University of Oregon School of Law, now on leave in the army; Henry Fowler, associate editor of the Bend Bulletin, and Harold Young, now a taxation specialist in Portland.

About 1913 Harison Kincaid, veteran editor, and his son, Webster, turned their press and type over to the University after the suspension of their Oregon State Journal which had been suspended in 1909 after forty-five years' publication; This equipment had the distinction of being that which was used in the publication of the Oregon Spectator, the first newspaper west of the Missouri River. February 5, 1946, marks the 100th anniversary of the old Washington handpress which the University still possesses.

IN 1915 another professor, Colin V. Dymont, former Oregon Journal and Portland Telegram news editor, was added to the staff and in 1916 the department of journalism was made a school and Allen was appointed dean. At this time Dymont left the University of Oregon to become dean of the University of Washington School of Journalism, and George S. Turnbull came from the Seattle Times to succeed him as professor of journalism here. In the fall of 1917, Robert C. Hall, printer-editor, came to the University as assistant professor of journalism to handle the mechanical courses and direct the University Press, the position which he now holds. Professor W. F. G. Thacher, already teaching English courses, began classes in advertising in 1919.

Past professors in the school of journalism include Ralph D. Casey, who is now director of journalism at the University of Minnesota, Arthur Caylor, now a columnist on the San Francisco News, and Reginald Cogeshall, present head of the department of journalism at the University of Maine.

The present staff of the journalism school is headed by Acting Dean George S. Turnbull, who was appointed to this position after Dean Eric W. Allen's death March 5, 1944. A memorial fund has been established by the Oregon Newspaper Publishers Association as a tribute to Dean Allen's brilliant and constructive leadership in journalism.

The complete staff includes Professor Thacher, now on leave from the University and teaching in Shrivensham Army University in England, Charles Hulten, also on leave, who has been assistant for management in the Office of War Information in Washington D. C.; Warren C. Price, Wisconsin graduate, and Des Moines news editor who was brought to the University to replace Hulten; Robert C. Hall; Carl C. Webb; R. D. Millican, U.S.C. product and former advertising agency man, and newspaper writer, who is replacing Professor Thacher, and L. L. Jermain, Oregon graduate of 1940, who in his senior year was editor of the Emerald. After a few months on the Oregon Journal, Jermain moved over to the Oregonian, leaving there to join the army. After a time in a Walla Walla hospital, Jermain received his discharge and returned to the University as an instructor.

THE physical plant of the journalism school consists of the journalism building and the University Press. The latter prints the Oregon Daily Emerald, a student newspaper, and Old Oregon, alumni magazine.

The courses, Acting Dean Turnbull said, are designed to give the graduate an adequate general background plus a familiarity with the current techniques, so that, upon graduation, he may be qualified to fill a great variety of positions on newspapers, in advertising concerns, and on radio without a long period of internship. Generally, about three-fourths of the students' work is in liberal

Festivities Honor Dads; 'O' Receives Face Lifting

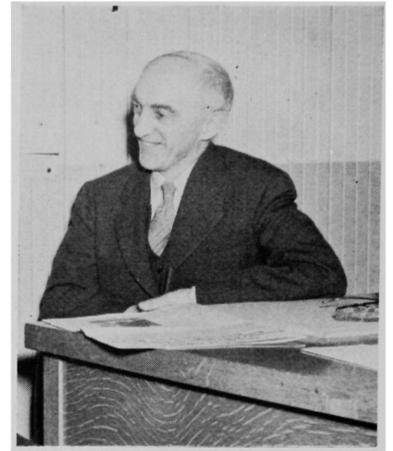

THE University's annual Dads' weekend rolled around February 1 and 2, and as usual, a great number of Oregon alums were among those visiting the campus.

Highlights of the weekend were the two Oregon-Washington basketball games Friday and Saturday nights. The traditional Dads' luncheon was held this year on Saturday noon at the Eugene hotel. Gene Vandeneynde, president of the Oregon Dads' association, presided at the luncheon and the guest speaker was E. C. (Eddie) Sammons, president of the United States National bank in Portland. University President Harry K. Newburn and ASUO President Ed Allen extended greetings to the Dads. A musical program and several short talks rounded out the event.

Saturday afternoon Kwamas, sophomore women's honorary, conducted the Dads on a tour of the old and new campuses. After the game Saturday night a number of the fraternities and sororities held open houses for the Dads and students.

Most of the men's and women's living organizations held formal Sunday dinner at their houses honoring the Dads. Sunday evening the event officially ended.

Deciding that the Oregon "O", set in the side of Skinner's Butte, should be traditionally yellow in honor of Dads' Weekend, the men of Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity journeyed to the Butte Thursday afternoon laden with buckets of paint, arts and science courses. The journalism courses, generally 45 credit hours out of 180, are revised as techniques in the field change so that the graduate will have a working knowledge of modern methods. The end of the war has brought an increase in enrollment, and Professor Turnbull, in speaking of the influx of veterans, declared that he was very glad to see so many of them able to take up where they left off. Students doing outstanding work in journalism are elected to Sigma Delta Chi, men's professional journalism fraternity, and Theta Sigma Phi, women's journalism honorary, or to the advertising fraternities: Alpha Delta Sigma for men and Gamma Alpha Chi for women.

In addition to the formal class work, students gain practical experience by work on the Oregon Daily Emerald, the campus daily newspaper; the Oregana, the University's student annual, and Old Oregon which affords the student experience in the magazine field. Both the Emerald and the Oregana have repeatedly won the coveted All-American Honor Awards for outstanding publications. Louise Montag is now editing the Emerald, and the Oregana is being edited by Jean Yoder. A publication called the Three O'Clock Whistle is another product of the University Press and is composed by the Three O'Clock Club—staff members who faithfully remain Friday nights to work on the Saturday morning Emerald.

The Emerald recently announced the lease of a teletype machine, which will commence service February 15, improving the publication's contact with world events and giving classes live, up-to-the-minute news to work with.

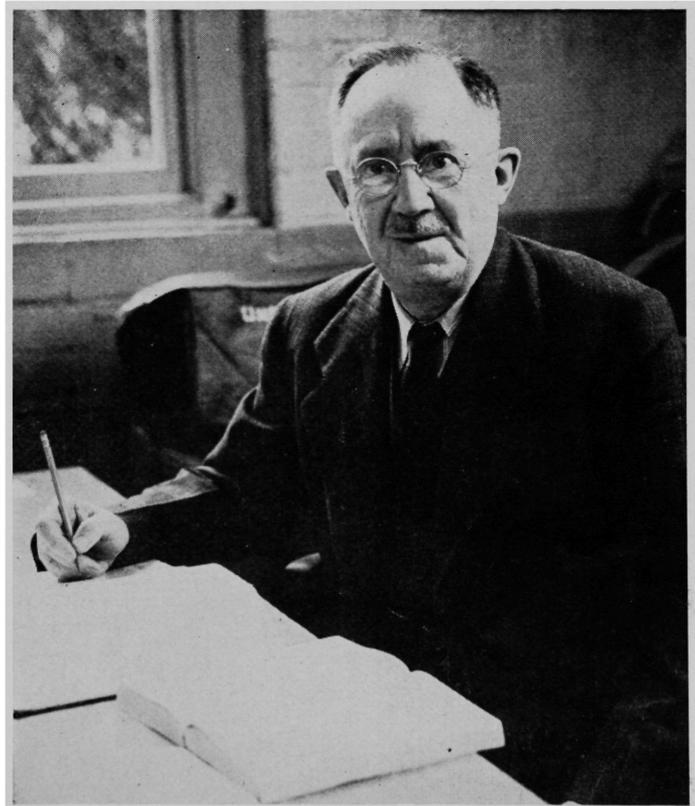

AS further practical experience, the reporting lab requires coverage on Eugene news, acquainting the students with the newspaper reporting procedure. The editing lab, in addition to its regular work, has been publishing the Shackrat, a four-page paper of news about the journalism school, which is sent to journalism alums.

The Oregon High School Press Association hold an annual Fall conference at the University, at which high school editors, business managers and advisers throughout the state are guests of the school of journalism, and students and faculty of the University contribute to a program designed to help solve problems of high school papers.

The purpose of the journalism school is to train students in journalism so as to enable them to carry on successfully the duties of a journalist in harmony with the ideals of the profession. A list of active alums, much too long for this space, evidences the success with which this purpose has been carried out. The future is faced with confidence.

brushes, and pledges. By the time the Dads began to arrive Friday evening, the "O", recently a drab cement color, had acquired a bright, new canary-colored face, thanks to the seats of the Sig Ep pledges' pants.

Joan Dolph, '45, is working for her master's degree at Radcliff.

Eric W. Allen came to the University as a young man in 1912, founded a department of journalism, built it to a school of journalism of national prominence, and served as dean until his death in 1944.

Alums Prove School's Worth

THE University school of journalism may well point with pride to the impressive list of its alumni who have made their mark in the field of journalism.

E. Palmer Hoyt, '23, is now publisher of the Portland Oregonian. Edison Marshall, '17, Robert Case, '20, and Ernest Haycox, '23, who is the newly elected president of the Oregon Alumni association, are all noted authors and short story writers. Charles Gratke, '23, is foreign editor of the Christian Science Monitor.

Six outstanding correspondents in World War II pay allegiance to the Webfoot school. Jay Allen, '23, world famous combat correspondent has given talks all over the country on his experiences. George F. Jones, '37, of the New York Times, was the first man to step into Tojo's presence immediately following his suicide attempt. Richard W. Johnston, '37, and Donald F. Caswell, '35, of United Press, were present along with Jones on the USS Missouri when the Japanese signed the surrender. These three men are all from Eugene as being University alumni.

Lloyd Tupling, '39, also was an active correspondent for United Press in the Pacific area and Reuel S. Moore, '21, was in London for United Press during the blitz.

Sterling Green, '34, Clair Johnson, '37, and Jack O'Meara, '27, are with A.P.

Webfoot Skiers Form Fast-Growing Club

MORE than 150 Oregon ski enthusiasts have already joined the re-enactuated University of Oregon Ski Club. The club, which has not been on the campus since 1941, has already started a busy year by making two trips to Hoodoo Bowl.

The first trip, held the weekend of Jan. 12, brought out 50 members of the club. Saturday morning the skiers boarded a bus and two cars and started on their way to the winter playground nestled in the heart of the Cascade range.

The following weekend, a Sunday trip was taken to Hoodoo, which also proved to be an exciting outing for many skiing Ducks.

Hendershott's sport shop in Eugene is cooperating by gathering and releasing complete information on ski conditions at all Cascade resorts. This service enables the skiers to pick the spot to go to, determine the kind of wax the snow conditions demand, and make ready in other ways to assure successful skiing trips.

THE club boasts several competitive skiers and it is hoped that they will soon be contesting with the OSC racing team, and other ski teams in this area.

Over 60 members of the ski club chose their officers for this year at a meeting held January 16. Jack Hessel, well known slats racer from Portland, was elected president. Other officers include: Toby West, vice-president; Marge Cowlin, secretary and treasurer; and Betty Mack, correspondence and publicity secretary.

An emblem has been chosen for the group which depicts a duck on skis. A trip will be made every Sunday to various snow paradises, and several more overnight trips are planned for this term, including the possibility of a trip to Mt. Hood.

Fraternities Return to UO

After a week of inactivity following rush week, pledging was again allowed and several houses have pledged men since that time.

Fraternities opening their houses this term and the number of pledges taken during rush week are: Beta Theta Pi, 8; Chi Psi, 8; Sigma Phi Epsilon, 8; Phi Gamma Delta, 9; Theta Chi, 3; Alpha Tau Omega, 10; and Phi Delta Theta, 6. Delta Upsilon, 5, and Sigma Alpha Epsilon, 9, are sharing the Delta Upsilon house.

*Alumni Choose
New Officers*

SERVICE to the University and to higher education is the purpose set down for the Oregon Alumni Association by Ernest Haycox '23, newly elected president.

Said the well-known novelist, "The purpose of the alumni association is to serve the University in whatever honest fashion it may. By doing so it also serves the cause of higher education generally and never has higher education needed friends quite so much as now."

"All universities now face their heaviest load, their greatest opportunity, and their hardest problems. The years of depression and war have been destructive to buildings, equipment and staff; these years have made them lean, our University no less so than others. Out of this leanness the University must find the vitality and the resources by which to properly serve the tremendous numbers which will come to it. The community expects much of it, and it must rise to the expectations or be condemned."

"Yet perhaps the community is not fully aware of our University's obligations or the additional instruments it ought to have in order to fulfill its obligations. Universities are notoriously humble, seldom given to the beating of drums.

THIS is the province of alumni members to speak for the University and those things it represents. We passed down this road in our time; let us see to it that the road remains open for others who have yet to come on. So long as a single qualified boy or girl is turned back from our gates because of student fees, housing conditions or lack of teaching facilities, we cannot say that either our University or our state is practising the kind of democracy which we so often embalm in speeches but sometimes ignore in practice."

After his graduation from the University of Oregon in 1923 with a bachelor of arts degree in journalism, Haycox worked on the Oregonian's police beat and then went to New York City to write full time. He began writing while at Oregon and he is now working on his 23rd novel. Among his well-known motion picture plays are "Stagecoach," and "Union Pacific." His "Canyon Passage" has just been completed and plans are being made to put "Bugles in the Afternoon" on the screen. In addition, he has written about 300 short stories and articles. While at the University the author was a member of the Delta Tau Delta fraternity.

Haycox and his wife, the former Jill Chord of Baker, live in Portland with their two children, Mary Ann, 18, and Jim, 14.

NEW vice president elected by the alumni association is Georgia Benson Patterson '24, of Hillsboro. Mrs. Patterson is the wife of state representative Paul L. Patterson.

At the University, where she studied economics, Mrs. Patterson was a member of Gamma Phi Beta. She was elected permanent secretary of the class of '24 and has been active in civic organization in her own community.

Ducks Sink Beavers

OREGON'S Aquaducks made their first big splash in about three years and came out on the top end of a sixty-four to ten score against OSC last month.

At the last minute Bob Hiatt, outstanding dash man was declared ineligible and Coach Corley had to shuffle some of his men in different events.

The last swimming team for Oregon in 1943 took the Pacific Coast title. This year's team is already establishing itself as a threat to repeat that performance.

Most of the team members are freshman and may be counted on to return next season. This season these new men will get their first chance to work in real competition.

*NO Grad Elected
U. S. Representative*

WALTER A. Norblad Jr. '31, of Astoria was swept into the house of representatives this month by a margin of 8,683 votes over his opponent, Bruce M. Spaulding. The 37 year old republican will fill the unexpired term of the late Rep. James W. Mott for the first congressional district.

Norblad, recently discharged combat intelligence officer with the army air corps, received his bachelor of science degree in law in 1931. He was graduated from the Harvard university law school in 1933 and became an associate in his father's law practice in Astoria, Ore. In 1934, he was elected representative to the Oregon legislature and was re-elected to that post in 1935.

Entering the army air corps late in 1935, Norblad served with the combat intelligence division in Europe, and received the air medal for five combat missions. He was also named law member of the general court martial for the ninth air force. He was discharged in September, 1945 with the rank of captain.

While at the University, Norblad was affiliated with the Sigma Nu fraternity.

He married Elizabeth Bendstrup in 1936 and they have one son.

Intramural Sports Field

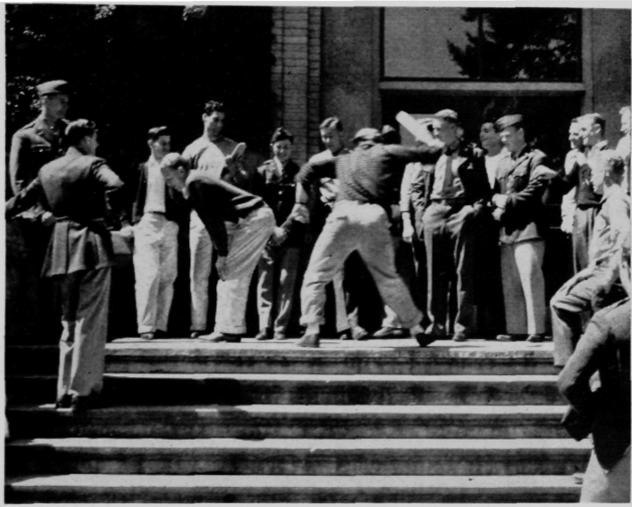

WORK on the new University intramural field is going ahead as fast as possible and the setup and location are excellent.

Oregon has long needed a field that could be devoted to intramural sports. In the past intramural sports had to carry on their activities in spots which were all too often not at all suited to the game or activity. Now the step has been taken and the University is looking ahead to the time when the new field will be opened for actual use of the intramural sports program.

The field will contain a regulation track, football field, baseball field, and additional facilities for numerous other types of outdoor sports.

The U. of O. Needs a Student Union Building

We Have a Leading Institution -- The University of Oregon
A Progressive, Growing Student Body

We can have the Student Union Building

The State Legislature has authorized a bond issue to raise $600,000 when we have raised $400,000. When this has been accomplished, funds will be available for the construction of a Student Union Building which will be in keeping with the eminent position of the University among the schools and colleges of the country. A suitable Student Union Building is one of the more important of the University's postwar projects.

Oregon Hoopsters on Review

Written for Old Oregon
By FRED BECKWITH, '46

Active basketballer Reedy Berg is shown making the winning score in the last few seconds of an Idaho game played in Eugene last month.

collegiate scorers. Dick is a sophomore, and is 20 years old, hailing from Portland, Oregon, where he played basketball for Lincoln High.

George Bray, who towers some six feet five inches, is 22 years old, and also a sophomore. Bray matriculated from Bonanza High School in the Oregon city of the same name. The boys call him "Shug". He is a physical education major JUNIOR Ken Hays, was a first stringer on the '45 outfit, and the tallest man on the squad, going six feet, seven inches into the air. He's a physical education major from Waitsburg, Washington. His rebound work throughout the season was very effective.

Reedy Berg, who played one year of frosh ball and one year of varsity competition, came all the way from Huron, South Dakota, to play ball for the Webfoots. Berg, 21 years old, is a pre-law student.

Roy Seeborg traded his army corporal stripes for civilian clothes, and joined the squad shortly after the term opened. He comes from Astoria, Oregon, where he played basketball for the local team. "Finn" as he is called, is 23, and has a year of frosh ball, and one of varsity competition, behind him. He is six feet, one inch, weighs 180 pounds, and will go into coaching when he graduates.

Captain Bob Hamilton, who was continually bothered by an injured leg, was the only senior on the first eight man list. He played one year of frosh ball, and was on the varsity two years prior to this year. Hamilton, 23, is five feet ten inches tall, and a social science major. He played basketball at Marshalltown High School, Marshalltown, Iowa, but lives in Seattle, Washington. Hamilton was 1943-44 northern division scoring champ.

LITTLE Stan "Salmon" Williamson, another Astoria, Oregon, boy, stepped out of a Marine uniform to join the Oregon basketballers. He and Seeborg were high-school team-mates. Stan is only five feet, seven inches tall, but he has plenty of spring in his legs, and frequently out-jumps the six-footers on held ball plays. Stan played one year of varsity prior to his service entrance, and is a physical education major. Now 22, he plans to go in to coaching upon graduation.

Mary "Rass" Rasmussen, a freshman from Franklin High School in Portland. He played three years of basketball there. "Rass" is six foot, three inches tall and tips the scales at 180 pounds. He's 20, and a physical education major.

Salmon Jumps . . .

Fast-moving, indefatigable Stan "Salmon" Williamson, high-scoring Web-foot hoopster scores in the second Oregon State tilt.

WHEN the 1946 basketball race opened in the northern division of the Pacific Coast conference, Oregon entered with the title of defending champions, having skooted to the top of the league ladder a year ago. Coach Howard Hobson had several lettermen and first stringers from that championship team as well as a pair of 1943 regulars, Stan Williamson and Roy Seeborg. These men with others formed a nice nucleus, and the morale was high on the campus for a repeat performance. But injuries to key-men cut down the Ducks' chances, and the Hobsonmen lost two out of their opening three games. The Lemon and Green fielded a team that was composed of ex-Marine Dick Wilkens and George Bray at forwards, six-foot seven inch Ken Hays at center, and Reedy Berg and another ex-Marine, Stan Williamson at guards.

A trio of men who saw considerable action were Roy Seeborg, Captain Bob Hamilton and freshman Marv Rasmussen.

Wilkens, called "Rick" by his buddies, is a Portland, Oregon, boy, who had one year of varsity competition under his belt. In 1945, he was one of the nation's leading

UO Alum Sees
Jap Surrender

THE first war correspondent to reach the house of Tojo, to break down the door and see the defeated militarist still standing, dramatically, gun in hand, was George Jones, '37. Jones and one other correspondent stood inside the entrance while the general swung around and faced them before slumping to the floor after his suicide attempt following the collapse of Japan.

This was not a "first" for George Jones. In 1942 he was with the navy at Guadalcanal and was in the first landings at New Georgia, Bougainville, Treasury Island and New Britain. Then followed the Marshalls invasions and carrier raids on Truk and Saipan in February 1944. In August 1944 he covered the Philippine Sea battle, then joined the staff of the New York Times in December, 1944. He covered the Luzon campaign for the Times up through the fall of Manila and the occupation by Allied forces.

With the 3rd Fleet off Japan he witnessed the first bombardment of Japan. He was also present at the surrender ceremonies on the Missouri. After stopping long enough in New York to pick up a passport, George will head out again, probably for the Far East, possibly India or China.

A war job well done is recognized by the Headliners valor award which was presented to him in June, 1944. Aside from strictly newspaper writing is a story for Harpers on the Truk raid and a combined effort by Quenton Reynolds, Frank Morris, Ralph Tatforth and himself on the Battle of Leyte Gulf for Colliers magazine.

From 23 to 29 portable houses from Hanford, Washington, will be brought to the campus in the near future to house married veterans and their families. The state board of higher education has already passed on the project and the University is investigating them now. The houses will be leased by the University and installed on Agate street just across from Hayward field. These houses are expected to be available for use around April 1. Concrete foundations have been prepared for them and utilities installed and a few of the houses are arriving this month.

in the armed forces, was the principal speaker at a recent student body assembly. "Why we have military government in Germany; how it was organized; what it does; its various processes; and what is left to be done" were a few of the pertinent subjects covered in his talk.

THE first "real" Dad's Day since 1942 was held on the campus February 1 and 2. Several established traditions, shelved during the war years, were revived. A cup was awarded to the house having the most fathers visiting and the calendar reminded the dads of years gone by with a Dads' luncheon, a campus tour, the Oregon-Washington basketball game, a University play, "School for Husbands" and several open houses rounding out the weekend.

A new University physical plant which will house the carpentry, electric, mechanical and paint shops, is now under construction on Onyx street just off 11th. The new shop building will be completed around May 1 and will cost $50,000.

The Oregon Press Conference scheduled its 27th annual meeting at the University February 8 and 9. The yearly conference is sponsored by the University school of journalism and the editors and publishers of all Oregon newspapers are invited to attend. This year's program covered all phases of newspaper work and concluded a one-week observance of the 100th anniversary of the newspaper industry in Oregon. Mr. Lawrence Spraker, publisher of the "Stayton Mail" is president of the conference and George Turnbull, acting dean of the school of journalism, is secretary.

THE Millrace, deep in University tradition and beloved by students and alums alike, broke a revetment during the recent floods and has now trickled away to a muddy, foot-deep rivulet. The break and subsequent lowering of the Race has caused several Eugene manufacturing concerns to resort to electric instead of water power. The break is expected to be repaired in the near future.
