Annual Alumni Elections

As the year '40 reduced itself to a pair of numerals on the Alumni Office calendar, Manager Elmer Fansett, '28, called the election board together. In the office of Dr. Edward Ernest Gray, ex-'18, Lane County Alumni president, they met. With Chairman Gray was Major Delbert Stanard, '14, M.D. '21, outgoing president now stationed with the National Guard at Camp Murray, Wash. Third party in the board's trio was C. Albert Chamberlin, '38, Christmas vacationing at his Roseburg home before returning to Northwestern university for winter term.

When the mail ballots were read, tallied, checked three times for possible inaccuracies, Dr. Gray announced Hollis N. Johnston, ex-'21, president of the University Alumni Association for 1941. A Portland architect, Johnston had just completed a year of service as vice-president.

Glancing further down the tally sheet, the chairman read the name Forrest E. Cooper, '27, J.D. '28, as newly elected vice-president. Lake County Alumni Director Cooper served as national 20-30 club president in 1933. Today he is a practicing attorney in Lakeview.

With many changes to be made in the directorate, the elective officials will first busy themselves appointing new or reappointing old directors to the Alumni Council. The response to requests for prospective appointees on the mail ballots was healthy, according to Manager Fansett. Many were suggested for areas outside the state as well as within Oregon's 36 counties.

Under the leadership of Major Stanard, the Alumni Association evidenced a successful year. Predominantly fruitful has been the county directorate system. This set-up became the off-spring of a constitutional revision more than a year ago.

Alumni President-elect Hollis N. Johnston, ex-'21, succeeds Major Delbert Stanard, '14, M.D. '21

Members of the Alumni Association should read the mast head (lower left hand corner of this page) which lists the elective officials, county directors, and Alumni Office staff. The necessary changes will be made in the February issue of OLD OREGON.

The Cover in Words

From a series of Professor Moll portraits taken by Photographer George Godfrey, '29, OLD OREGON selected one for its January cover. Further explanation of the poet with pipe and Van Dyke is unnecessary. Page 1 covers his habits and successes in "Honors From 'Down Under'" by George Godfrey.

Initiated in this issue is OLD OREGON's latest format design which should find favor with many Alumni who have been asking for a new cover face to trade mark their magazine. Each month, a writer for the publication and a newsworthy scene or portrait will be featured on this cover.

Holloways Fill Files

Holloway is a family name that appears repeatedly in the Alumni Association's records. Charles R. Holloway, ex-'35, secretary-treasurer of the Portland Duck club, appears first. He has the "best looking baby boy that anyone ever laid eyes on . . . five month's old, has a tooth, and a charming mother." The family address is Rt. 1, Box 243, Oswego.

The former Sally Holloway, '37, is married to Walter H. Evans, Jr., '32, who is assistant city attorney in Portland. They live at 3026 S. Main St.

John H. Holloway, ex-'36, was recently admitted to the Oregon bar and is employed at the Commercial Credit Co. He is married to Miss June Ritter, ex-'39, and the two live at 1831 S. E. Hawthorne Ave. in Portland.

Robert C. Holloway, ex-'37, is employed by the Oregon state game commission as a junior biologist. He has his home at 6314 S. E. 32nd Ave. in the Rose City. Finally, Harry H. Holloway, ex-'41, is assigned to the civil service commission in Washington, D.C., making his residence at 3811 Van Ness N. W. in the nation's capital.

Lawyer Forrest E. Cooper, '27, J.D. '28, will assist Johnston as newly elected vice-president.

Honor From 'Down Under' By GEORGE H. GODFREY, '29

Best book of year 1940, chosen by Commonwealth Literary committee of Australia, was "Cut From Mulga," authored by bewhiskered Ernest G. Moll, Oregon's associate professor of English. Coveted by every writer "down under" is this recognition. Although an Americanized Australian, Jerry Moll is still claimed by his homeland fans as theirs. News Bureau Manager Godfrey, runner of risky rapids and writer of University happenings, describes the popular proff as poet, naturalist, educator and fisherman.—Ed.

When Jerry Moll, shortly after moving to Eugene some 12 years ago, decided he wanted to be a fisherman—a real fisherman in true western style—he didn't rush down to a sporting goods store and let some salesman outfit him with all the tackle, lures, and gadgets in stock. Instead, he spent considerable time just going along with other fishermen. While up the McKenzie or Willamette rivers on outings, he studied the streams, the food habits of the fish, and the best and most simple methods of attracting them to lures.

Then, when he had a working knowledge of the sport, and a definite idea of what he wanted, he purchased a rod, line, reel, net, flies and leaders, and set about the business of catching fish. He became a good fisherman, and all the joys that only good fishermen know were his from that time on.

This same careful, thoughtful preparation for tasks as well as pleasures, has marked the career of Ernest G. Moll, professor and poet. He is loved by his students at the University of Oregon, who find him a sympathetic, yet forceful, dynamic teacher. He is loved by other poets for the courageous, yet altogether charming style of verse. And other thousands, neither students nor poets, who are lovers of creative writing, hold him in highest respect for his literary work and for his achievements in the world of letters.

BORN IN 1900

Professor Moll's talent has spanned the vast Pacific, for his latest book, "Cut From Mulga," has the coveted distinction of being the official publication in creative writing for the year of the Commonwealth of Australia. Word of this honor, and advance copies of the volume, have just reached here. Much of the work on the poems that comprise this book was done during the past year, when Professor Moll was an exchange professor to the University of Sydney. But for material he drew on memories of his boyhood and youth, which he spent on the continent "down under."

Born at the turn of the century, August 25, 1900, in Victoria, Australia, Professor Moll studied at Concordia college in that country from 1913 to 1918, then came to the United States to attend Lawrence college, in Wisconsin in 1920, and in two years he was graduated with a bachelor of arts degree. He then went to Harvard, where in a year he obtained his master of arts diploma. He spent the summer of 1922 traveling in Europe. From Harvard he went to Colorado college as a member of the faculty, and two years later returned to Australia where he spent some time in travel and study. He came back to Colorado college for a year in 1927, and in 1928 joined the English staff of the University of Oregon. Except for last year when he was absent on leave to teach in Sydney, he has been here since that time.

In Oregon, Professor Moll has found what he believes is the ideal locale for a poet and a lover of the out-of-doors, and at the University of Oregon he has found congenial colleagues and interesting and interested students. During vacations and often on week-ends he tramps the Oregon woods, adding to his bird lore something in which he is also remarkably skilled, or filling his creel with fighting trout. One summer, which resulted in a delightful book of poems, he spent as a ranger-naturalist at Crater Lake.

Before "Cut From Mulga" won the honor accorded it by the Australian government, Professor Moll had already written noteworthy books, both prose and verse. In 1927, Vinal publishing house of New York brought out "Sedge Fire," a group of poems largely of Australia, which definitely established him as one of the country's noteworthy young writers. Four years later, "Native Moments" was published by the Metropolitan press in Portland, and in 1933 he was the author of a standard text, "Appreciation of Poetry," published by Crofts of New York.

PROLIFIC WRITER

Of special delight to his friends here in Oregon is "Campus Sonnets," a collection of verse depicting observations and moods about the University. "Blue Interval," inspired by Crater Lake, appeared in 1935.

While his earlier volumes have all been worthwhile and praiseworthy, "Cut From Mulga" definitely stamps Professor Moll as a leading poet of two continents. So impressed was the Australian prime minister with the manuscript that he personally presented it to the commonwealth publications committee. The entire field of letters is carefully combed before the "book of the year" is chosen and published by this group, which has for its printer the Melbourne university press, a branch of the famed Oxford university press in England.

Far from feeling any envy, other writers in Australia have been warm and enthusiastic in their praise of the volume. Writing to a friend, with no knowledge that the words would eventually reach Professor Moll, Hugh McCrea, acknowledged dean of Australian poets, said: "Make Moll the figurehead and bowsprit of your book, the others will be proud to tail the wake behind!" And this beloved man of letters also added: "My favorite poet forever—Australian or not—loving not only his poetry but the man himself, is Moll."

Another Australian, whose books made a deep impression in America, Frank Dally Davidson, writes: "Cut From Mulga" will have an enduring place, for it feeds our roots. Some of its lines are blinding—yet it has a scriptural simplicity of statement, with great richness of connotation."

"Cut From Mulga" is a lusty, vigorous book, yet its virile, often intense verses are interspersed with sentimental, whimsical bits, some of which artfully conceal a tear or provoke a sly smile. Into such poems as "Winter Ploughing" and "Returned Soldier" he has put forth the spirit of the men of the land, and many a verse teems with the hardships of those who labor with the sheep on the limitless pastures of that vast continent.

Using mainly quatrains and the "abab" rhyme scheme that have long been his forte, Moll combines simplicity of phrase with curious and revealing twists to give the reader rare flashes of insight into things Australian which, on second reading, become life universal. His wards, like the

"coulters in the sod" in "Winter Ploughing," are "shining and sharp as knives."

For example, read this concluding stanza from "The Leave-Taking," in which is described the goodbye to a faithful horse killed:

"She did not seem to feel, but oh,
Along my fingers sure and slow
The warmth of her crept into me!
And at her side I turned to see
The dawn that eyes that did not fear
Its golden beauty nor the near Unhurried heavy step of one
Who came with halter and with gun."

Then there are some rare, short bits, which mingle humor with poignancy and carry Moll's deep feeling for the earth in undertones:

"He loved his horse; and when it died
Grabbed his knife and got its hide.
The cash—consider while you praise—
Kept him drunk for seven days."

Neither is the satirical approach to the topical side of life avoided, but from Moll's pen the timely lines frequently become timeless. Witness this "Guns on Western Front Play Hide-and-Seek," the title of which is taken from a newspaper headline on the war:

"A pleasant game, of course, and good clean fun
This hide-and-peek of sportive gun and gun;
But when they find each other in their play
It's just as well to look the other way."

Whether he be reading a poem for a class, fishing along a woodland stream, or seeking expression of his heart by writing, there seems to be the yearnings of a lotus-eater in Jerry Moll. Those who read his lines find a kinship in this spirit as well as in the ordinary things which are described in Moll's extraordinary manner.

It is not hard for one to see vividly the beauty of the Australian countryside when one reads such poems as "Eagles Over the Lambing Paddock," "On Watching a Woodchopper," "The Hide Buyer," "Desert Country in Summer," and "Clearing for the Plough." Nor can one escape the pungent, incisive, and almost physical sensations evoked by such extracts from life as "The Slug," "The Sensualist Replies," and "The Snake."

With no superfluous words or lines, with no thoughts that are not cut carefully and clearly, these poems survive reading and re-reading. On each perusal of the pages of "Cut From Mulga," new musical meanings appear to add to the reader's delight.

Friends of "Jerry" Moll look forward to many pleasant hours in his company, fishing, or in conversation. Friends of "Professor Ernest G. Moll" anticipate an increasing flow of poems, of literature, while many generations of students will learn to love him and to respect him for his interpretation of what is good and great in writings.

Those who do not know the man will know him well after they have read his book; those who know him personally will have their pleasure in his friendship whetted and made more complete. For like Barry, in his lines to a "Returned Soldier," Jerry Moll possesses a "charm" and fullness of spirit that will carry him through life, "uncaught."

Employment Assurance By JANET SMITH

Employment Secretary Janet Smith plays role of "best friend" to innumerable students and graduates of Oregon. Figures computed reveal healthy results from her work during a typical school year, 1939-40. Then 3,802 jobs were filled, returning a total income of $63,897 to University students. Many of these were odd jobs; all provided greater possibilities for continuing educational pursuits when personal funds were low. During this same period her campus phone, local 242, rang 5,962 times, and 8,391 callers presented themselves to discuss placement problems. Summer offices maintained in Eugene and Portland have helped many. From June to September, '39, about 370 odd and permanent jobs were assigned through Eugene, 146 through Portland. Since Miss Smith went to work looking for work in 1936, 684 applications have been filed by graduates and 586 jobs have been filled, netting a total annual income of $703,200.—Ed.

Although only four years old, the graduate placement office of the University of Oregon has rendered distinctive service to Oregon Alumni. During these four years 684 graduates have made application for employment through this office and of this number only six are now unemployed. This service is not to be confused with the placement bureau of the School of Education under the efficient leadership of Miss Ida May Pope, '26.

This graduate phase of student employment grew from demands made on the undergraduate office for people who had finished college and were ready for permanent positions. For some time these requests were filled by graduates who chanced to be known in the undergraduate employment office. These chance placements proved very satisfactory in most instances and the employers called the office again and again for names and recommendations of others who were in line for permanent jobs. Dean of Student Personnel, Karl Onthank, '13, saw the possibilities and advantages to the student and the University in encouraging such a service in the undergraduate program. Chiefly through his vision and encouragement the office is fulfilling its purpose and has received most favorable comment from employers over the entire United States.

The employment office is inadequately housed in the campus Y.M.C.A. hut and has recently added a conference room where employers may interview prospective employees. Many employers are taking advantage of the service offered and return to the campus at specified times each year for the purpose of meeting and conferring with those who have expressed an interest or desire to work in the fields which the employers represent.

BUSINESS VARIED

This office works in close cooperation with the Alumni office and with the different schools of the University, particularly the School of Business Administration. The different businesses and concerns interested in Oregon graduates are many and varied. Among those that might be cited as representative are: all the large oil companies, Standard, Union, Texaco, Shell, and Richfield; Eastman Kodak, Armstrong Cork, Proctor & Gamble, Borden's, Campbell's, Heinz, Swift, Weyerhaeuser Lumber; and the nationally known rubber companies such as Goodyear, Goodrich and Akron.

The field of selling led all others in taking graduates last year. Many of these appointments will lead to more remunerative positions in the same companies after experience has been secured in the selling departments.

The secretary of employment feels that this office could serve the Alumni of the University of Oregon better if ex-students would file their applications in this office. Our chief handicap is that we have to refuse many jobs because the students who are graduating lack experience. If we were able to call upon former students who, while working, are still looking for better positions, this office could fill many positions which now must be turned down with regret. Again and again the only drawback to the filling of these positions is lack of experience and maturity of applicants. For instance, at the moment of writing, the graduate placement office has requests for five experienced women secretaries. There is a request for a junior chemist, a traveling position for a man with at least five years experience in selling or banking. Applications for permanent employment may be handled confidentially so as not to jeopardize a position which an applicant already holds.

CONSTANCE SURVEYS

Clifford Constance, '25, M.A. '29, has made a study of the Alumni from '28 to '35, as assistant registrar, asking "In what ways do you feel the University training might be improved." The following are the findings of that study:

"Seven possible propositions were listed, all of which received considerable support.

(One proposition might have been supported more by Liberal Arts majors than by Architecture majors, another might have seemed better to unemployed than to employed Alumni, another may have been recommended most by only recent graduates. We sought out sixteen factors (such as major, employment status, date of graduation) which might show these group differences, and for significance we have used only those with differences of at least 10% between the lowest and the highest percentages of support.

"Proposition number 1—'Require broader knowledge of major fields of human learning for the sake of the cultural value.' This is favored by those Alumni who were the better students, especially by the Phi Beta Kappas. In general, the longer the interval since graduation the less emphasis does this proposition receive. Professional school majors (Music is a marked exception), and those whose vocational experiences have been unsupported by their education, tend not to favor this. Those Alumni now settled vocationally seem to long for more general education, while the unemployed and the housewives do not. On the basis of salary there are two widely separated and unexplained intervals in which this proposition is not favored: below $800 and around $3500. Alumni now living away from the Pacific Coast are more in favor of this proposition than are those who have remained here. In general, this type of requirement is endorsed by Alumni who were good students and who have achieved a fairly satisfactory economic status.

"Proposition number 2—'Encourage specialization in and mastery of some chosen field as soon as possible.' This is favored by those Alumni who were the poorer students and markedly is not approved by the Phi Beta Kappas. The advocates include those whose majors and whose vocational experiences are in the fields of Architecture, Business, and Journalism, particularly. As might be expected, the unemployed are in favor of this proposition; also, oddly enough, are those in the highest salary bracket. Also those Alumni from larger cities recommend it more than do those from smaller towns. In general, this educational emphasis is endorsed by Alumni whose educational record is not high, but whose vocational experience probably has brought them more satisfaction.

"Proposition number 3—'Provide more definitely vocational types of training.' This is recommended by the same type of Alumni as favor the preceding proposition, this not including the Phi Beta Kappas. It is interesting to note that the students who won general honors in campus activities (such as Mortar Board, Koyl Cup, and the like) generally vote the same as the Phi Beta Kappas. More vocational courses are favored by Alumni who did not specialize heavily in their major, and by those who found little relationship between their courses and their subsequent jobs. Majors in Law and in Physical Education feel they do not need additional vocational training, as do Alumni who have gone into architectural work or medicine. Students feel the need the least of all groups classified by employment, and the highest salary group is practically content to have no further vocational knowledge. In general, this proposition is favored somewhat more by the weaker students, but the conviction seems to have been arrived at through comparative lack of economic success."

These suggestions have set a challenge for the undergraduate employment office. The numbers of students who earn part or all of their way through this office constitute about 60% of the total enrollment. The jobs secured are fitted to the students' experience and ability and every effort is made to promote them along the line of their future endeavor.

The University of Oregon employment office is open the year around. The work during the summer in Eugene takes care of vacation employment and students enrolled in the summer school. The employment office in Portland, sponsored by the Portland unit of the Oregon Dads and supervised by the University employment office at Eugene, fills a need which has not been met in any other way in Portland.

Thus the University of Oregon employment office seeks to serve those who have left the campus through the graduate placement service, those who are attending school through the undergraduate bureau, and those who are planning to enter the University by finding jobs which will enable them to earn part of their way while on the campus.

'Unto the Second Generation'

Concluded on this page is a survey of Oregon Alumni whose offsprings currently attend the University. Begun in the December issue of OLD OREGON, the second generation story has proven of wide interest and is becoming a yearly attraction.

Since even editors are possessed with human attributes, hence liable to err, the Alumni Office expects to receive letters mentioning important omissions from the two installments of "Unto the Second Generation." Such letters will be warmly welcomed and the additional information will be incorporated into the February edition.

Prelude to Conference Play

By BRUCE HAMBY, ex-'34

Proof of a basketball team's prowess is in its following. Athletic News Bureau Director Hamby aptly explains the popularity of Coach Hobson's hoopsters with these figures: Three and a half seasons of play and a total of 470,000 spectators. Northern division conference play begins for Oregon in Eugene against Washington State, January 10 and 11. Thence follows Oregon State at Corvallis, January 17; W.S.C. at Pullman, January 21 and 22; Idaho at Moscow, January 24 and 25; Washington at Eugene, February 3 and 4; O.S.C. at Eugene, February 8; Idaho at Eugene, February 14 and 15; O.S.C. at Corvallis, February 22, and at Eugene, February 27. Season closes in Seattle against Washington, March 7 and 8.—Ed.

University of Oregon's varsity basketball team pretty well established itself as the nation's No. 1 traveling court aggregation this past December by making its third annual transcontinental barnstorming tour.

Since Coach Howard Hobson, '26, took his 1938-39 national collegiate champions (to-be) east two years ago, Webfoot teams have piled up more than 30,000 miles of travel and have appeared in virtually every leading eastern and mid-western center.

The trip just completed was the fastest yet, with only 19 days needed to go from Eugene to New York City and return, with stops to and from at Norman, Okla.; Buffalo, N. Y.; Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Baltimore, and Peoria, Ill.

Highlight of this third eastern invasion was, of course, another appearance at Madison Square Garden in New York City. For a third straight year the Webfoots were featured on the opening doubleheader program of the season. This in itself was a record, for no other western school has been invited to the huge sports center three times in a row.

Proof that the University and Oregon basketball under Hobson has become nationally famous was the all-time record crowd of 18,325 paid spectators which jammed the Garden to see the Webfoots meet Long Island university. As far as is known, this is the largest crowd ever to witness a basketball game, anywhere or any time.

ATTENDANCE RECORDS

Again in Pittsburgh the Webfoots aided in setting a new attendance record for that city. The Oregon-Duquesne university game at the Duquesne Gardens attracted 7,000 spectators, nearly 2,000 more than the previous high mark.

All along the way large crowds turned out to watch the visiting Oregonians being pitted against outstanding home teams. The same held true for games played at home—in Eugene, Portland and Salem. After the first twelve warmup games Oregon had played before 53,000 spectators, bringing their total for three and a half seasons of play to more than 470,000.

Ten players made up the squad for the trip just concluded. Selected by Coach Hobson were six lettermen and four sophomores, the most first-year men ever to gain the coveted squad positions. Veterans were Hank Anderson, Evert "Red" McNeely, Archie Marshik, Vic Townsend, Paul Jackson, who composed the starting lineup, and George "Porky" Andrews. The sophomores were Warren Taylor, Wally Borrevik, Quentin Sidesinger and Don Kirsch. Traveling with the team was its efficient manager, Leonard Ruecker.

First stop on the cross-country tour was at Norman to meet the University of Oklahoma. This contest was in the nature of a return engagement after the N.C.A.A. clash between the teams two years ago. After being held to 8 to 12 count in the first half, the Webfoots unleashed a deadly scoring barrage to win by 42 to 29 count.

Another return engagement was played at Buffalo, N. Y., against Canisius, which was on the schedule two years ago. Oregon came out on top for a second time, this year by a 50 to 42 score.

Oregon's clash with Long Island university in New York City was a "natural" after the overtime thriller staged the year before. In that contest Long Island came from behind to score a 56 to 55 victory in what was termed the greatest basketball contest ever staged at the Garden. It had followed another hard-fought battle the previous season, won 38 to 36 by City college.

The Blackbirds proved too much for the Webfoots this time, however, and won with a strong second half performance, 43 to 31. Oregon kept in the game through a seesaw first period but faded badly at the close.

En route home from New York City the Webfoots played four engagements and for a time it appeared they couldn't find their way back into the victory column. At Philadelphia 5,000 persons saw Temple win a 45 to 42 thriller. Again at Pittsburgh, Duquesne eked out a close 37 to 34 decision before the aforementioned crowd of 7,000. It was almost the same story at Baltimore as a now road weary crew lost to the University of Baltimore, 35 to 25.

DEFEAT BRADLEY TECH

The entire trip was turned into a success, however, in the final game, played against Bradley Tech at Peoria. Bradley was rated as strong as two years ago, when it defeated Oregon's national champions by a 52 to 39 count. This year's squad more than made up for that setback by bowing over the Braves, 57 to 45.

The record of three victories in seven starts may not look too well on paper in comparison to previous years, but there is no doubt the caliber of the opposition as a whole was much higher. According to "Hobby" there was not a single "breather" among the seven games and Long Island and Duquesne were rated by him as among the greatest teams he had ever seen.

Returning to the coast on December 24, the Webfoots played three games in Portland and Salem before reaching Eugene. In Portland another record crowd of some 2,000 filled Howard hall to capacity to watch Oregon trounce the undefeated University of Portland five, 47 to 26. The next night at Salem the Webfoots rolled over Willamette, 46 to 33. Back in Portland on the third evening, the Rubenstein Oregonians of Eugene, composed of members of the great 1938-39 Webfoot team, scored a 45 to 43 upset.

The Webfoots played two more warmup opponents before embarking on northern division play January 10 and 11 against Washington State. The University of Utah came to Eugene on January 2 for an inter-

Editors and Businessmen of

By RAY SCHRICK, '43

A journalistic pen far mightier than the sword has left a long and vivid history at Oregon. It reveals a story which began back in 1891 and one that since that time has spun many characters and left certain definite impressions on the University.

The opening chapter of this history of journalism appeared in the Reflector, the first student newspaper published on the campus. It continued through the Bulletin in 1894, the Oregon Monthly in 1897, and finally the Oregon Weekly in February, 1900. The early journalistic yarn reached its high point in 1909 with publication of the first paper under the name of Oregon Emerald.

Since that time rapid changes to semi-weekly, tri-weekly, and finally daily publication have left a chain of editors and business managers, student leaders in journalism, who today are leaders in another world which involves news gathering, news writing, personnel work, and valuable service in many walks of life.

These are the men and women, who, while at the University, looked to journalism as possibly their most likely following. In 31 years, 62 editors and business managers have served on the Oregon Emerald. Of this number 38 are still employed in the newspaper fields.

NICHOLAS FIRST EDITOR

These names that have been and still are making University of Oregon news began with Wilson Nicholas and Fritz Dean, first editor and business manager in the years from 1909-1910. Nicholas is now civil engineer with the city of Portland, while Dean is the head of a garage and Ford agency.

From these two a fan of leaders spreads out to the midwest, to the east coast and New York. This same fan spreads back all the way to San Francisco on the Pacific coast and north to Seattle.

During the 30 years that the Emerald has been published on the campus two girl editors have served their terms in the journalistic limelight as a guiding spoke in campus public opinion. First of these was Helen Brenton, in 1918, who now is professor of hygiene and director of women's health service at Stanford university. The second was Dorothy Duniway in 1919, and she is today a publicity and free-lance writer in New York City with the name of Mrs. Paul M. Ryan.

The years traced by growth of the Emerald have been historic ones, for they have paralleled a similar increase in size and position by the University of Oregon. For even as many editors have grown to take their places in the world since 1909, so has the campus become "of age."

When Chester Morris, the second Emerald editor, and Wendall Barbour, his business manager, came into office in 1910, enrollment at Oregon was 904. Morris today is vice-president of Commonwealth, Inc., in Portland; Barbour has since passed away. Registration at the University today, however, with Lyle Nelson and Jim Frost in the reigns as editor and business manager, is more than 3700. The campus "public" today is a much broader body.

In 1911-12, Karl Onthank, present dean of personnel at Oregon, and Andrew Collier, now vice-president of the First National bank of Portland, directed policies of the Emerald. This pair held the same offices for the school months of 1912-13 and theirs is the only case of two students together holding down editorial and business jobs for more than one year.

Since 1913 the positions have changed hands with regularity each fall.

FOWLER IN 1913-14

Henry Fowler, now associate editor of the Bend Bulletin, and Marsh Goodwin, district agent for Aetna Life Insurance company in Lane, Linn and Benton counties, served in 1913-14; Leland Hendricks, deceased, and Anthony Jaureguy, certified public accountant in charge of the Boston office of Price Waterhouse & Co., public accountants, came in the following year; Max Sommer, merchandise manager of Sommer & Kaufman, and Floyd Westfield, Lane county manager for Mutual Life Insurance company of New York, in 1915-16; and pre-war years came to a close in 1916-17 with Harol Hamstreet, by 1936 publisher of the Wallowa Sun, and Burle B. Bramhall, now partner in Bramhill & Stein investment house, as editor and business manager, respectively.

During the World War, Harry Crain, present managing editor of the Salem Capital Journal, and Jeannette Calkins, former OLD OREGON editor, filled leading editorial posts on the Emerald.

They were followed by Helen Brenton and Douglas Mullarkey, as editors, and Harris Ellsworth, as business manager in 1918-19. Mullarkey is in 1940 editor of the Burns Times-Herald, and Ellsworth is editor of the Roseburg News-Review. Two editors appeared the following year with Dorothy Duniway and Leith Abbott dividing the year. Warren Kays headed the business staff and is now employed by the Los Angeles Times. Abbott is advertising manager for the Southern Pacific railroad in Portland.

With installation of Harry Smith and Raymond Vester in 1920 the Oregon Emerald became the Oregon Daily Emerald, a paper printed five times each week. Smith is now in Portland as assistant manager for Olds, Wortman & King, and Vester is president of the Oregon Association of Personal Finance Co.

A larger per cent of editors and business managers since that time have followed the journalistic profession:

Floyd Maxwell, 1921-22, however, is executive head of Washington petroleum industries; his business manager, Webster Ruble, is advertising manager of the Daily World in Aberdeen, Wash.; Kenneth Youel, 1922, is assistant in public relations with General Motors in New York, and Lyle Jantz is a manager of the Better Business Bureau; 1923—Arthur Rudd, now sales manager for Publishers' Syndicate in Chicago, and Leo Munly, sales supervisor of the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph in San Francisco; 1924—Donald Woodward, Portland realtor and general insurance man, and James Leake, deceased; 1925—Edward Miller, Sunday editor of the Oregonian, and Frank Loggan, business manager of the Bend Bulletin; 1926—Sol Abrahamson, head of copy disk for the New York Daily Mirror, and Earl Slocum, assistant manager Vista Del Arroyo hotel, Pasadena.

1927—Ray Nash, associate editor, Graphic Arts, and Milton George, manager of the Hastings News, and vice-president of the Burton Press, Inc., Yonkers, New York; 1928—Arden X. Pangborn, Morning Oregonian managing editor, and Lawrence R. Thielen, account executive with Ray Carr advertising agency.

MANY ON "MET" PAPERS

It is an interesting fact that every editor and business manager from 1929 on up to the present with one exception is still engaged in some variety of journalistic endeavor and the majority are working on metropolitan papers:

1929—Arthur Schoeni, today manager of the United Press in Olympia, and William Hammond, manager of the new operators examination department, automobile division, Salem; 1930—Vinton Hall, with McCann-Erickson advertising agency in Los Angeles, and Anton Peterson, manager of circulation for the Journal; 1931—Willis Duniway, Washington state manager of United Press, and Lawrence Jackson, national advertising department of the Los Angeles Examiner.

1932—Richard Neuberger, free-lance writer for the Oregonian and other publications, and Harry Schenk, University of Oregon Journalism School professor and manager of the Oregon Newspaper Publishers' association; 1933—Sterling Green, with Associated Press in San Francisco, and Grant Thuemmel, production manager for a Portland advertising agency; 1934—William Phipps, in Seattle as a radio news commentator, and Grant Thuemmel, again business manager; 1935—Robert Lucas, city editor of the Astorian-Budget, and Eldon Haberman, classified section of the San Francisco Examiner.

1936—Fred Colvig, Oregonian news staff, and Walter Vernstrom, Bend Bulletin advertising staff; 1937—LeRoy Mattingly, manager for the United Press in Great Falls, Montana, and Walter Vernstrom again business manager; 1938—Paul Deutschmann, news editor of the La Grande Observer, and Harold Haener, assistant advertising manager at Lipman Wolfe in Portland; 1939—Leonard Jermain, reporter for new night edition of the Oregonian, and George Luoma, Oregon's assistant educational activities director and Law School student; 1940—editor and business manager of the Oregon Daily Emerald, Lyle Nelson and Jim Frost.

Classed among the best in college journalism the nation over is Oregon's Daily Emerald with three "pace-maker" and "all-American" certificates tacked up in Editor Lyle Nelson's office. Progressive, too, is its advertising staff with Jim Frost as business manager. Space is sold on the strength of a two million dollar market created by the student body. Behind Nelson, Frost, and the Emerald personnel is Dean Eric W. Allen of the Journalism School. Well traveled, read and matured Dean Allen (pictured here at his desk) emphasizes training in literature, social problems, the arts, and science as a background for the better understanding of current, complex problems with which the youthful journalist of the extreme left is portrayed Editor Nelson Manager Frost, one of the few undergraduates the Emerald's driving but scholarly assistant of former editors and managers impresses the following graduation.—Ed.

Dr. Goffin Publishes

Dr. Marie Miller Goffin, M.D. '01, of Portland has had her book, "The Trail of the Plow," published recently by Binford and Mort. Described as a historical novel, the book depicts the early day struggle in the Northwest over land titles.

"On the upper Columbia and stretching more than three hundred miles north and east, lies the great 'Inland Empire.' Here in the 1870's and 80's was a vast expanse of 'public domain,' claimed by no less than four agencies," the government, the railroads, the cattlemen and the homesteaders. With such words Dr. Goffin paints a poignant picture of struggle for possession, involving the heroism and treachery of frontier life. In it the gun typifies avarice and greed, the plow symbolizes progress and security.

Judge Edwin O. Potter

Judge Edwin O. Potter, '87, M.A. '90, LL.B. '90, dean of Lane county practicing attorneys, died October 6 at the age of 80 years.

Born, raised, educated in Eugene, the venerable barrister served local citizens through his life, proving himself truly a pioneer of the campus city. At death, he was president of the city library board, chairman of the city planning committee; and secretary of the Lane County Pioneer association.

His public services began as a deputy district attorney from 1890 to '94, then county judge from 1896 to 1900. A member of the Eugene school board and a representative in the state legislature were other offices served by the Oregon alumnus.

Born August 25, 1860 of Lane county pioneers, Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Potter, he was married to Miss Emily Bristol, '87, October 16, 1890, shortly after having been admitted to the state bar. Their only child, Mrs. Pauline Potter Homer, '13, died November 2, 1918.

The judge was a member of Phi Delta Phi legal fraternity.

sectional battle at McArthur court and decisively lost 51 to 15. Willamette appeared two nights later, losing to Oregon 76 to 46.

The Webfoots are given a good chance of winning back the conference laurels which escaped them a year ago after two successive championships. The league is expected to be much stronger as a whole, however, with any one of the five contenders capable of coming out on top.

Barring changes caused by injuries or failure of players to live up to previous performances, Oregon will use a two-lineup system this year. This means a lineup of five veterans will start the game and be relieved halfway through each of the two periods by a second complete team composed of four sophomores and one junior.

The No. 1, or starting lineup, consists of Anderson and McNeely, forwards; Marshik, center; Townsend and Jackson, guards. All but McNeely were regulars at the close of the 1939-40 season. The second unit is composed of Taylor and Sidesinger, forwards; Borrevick, 6-foot 8½-inch giant, center; Andrews and Kirsch, guards.

Anderson led the Oregon players in scoring for the first 12 games with 120 points, or ten a game. He was followed by Townsend with 105. The other players were closely bunched with Taylor third high, chalking up 55.

History of the University of Oregon

BY DR. HENRY D. SHELDON

This is the story of a whole host of Mr. Chips. A series of epochal struggles. You who think you know your University will be amazed, amused and informed, when you have read this "human document."

It is literally a panorama of "human vignettes." The chapter on Colonel John Leader and the war years of 1917 and 18, is itself worth the price of this unusual book.

And WHO, we ask, is better qualified to write about the school we love so dearly, than our own revered Dr. Henry (Shelly) Sheldon? From the turn of the century Dr. Sheldon has been a moving and dynamic spirit behind the scenes, as well as in the class room. He has served under five college presidents, has seen the student body grow from four hundred to nearly four thousand. He has known personally nearly all the men and women who contributed most generously to the promulgation of learning and culture. His story of the University is something far more than a history; it is the stirring saga of pioneer folk creating for themselves and posterity a shrine, dedicated to a magnificent idea—"mens agatat molem."

SAID THE ELECTRICAL MOUTH TO THE ELECTRICAL EAR...

*"Joe took father's shoe bench out.
She was waiting at my lawn."*

If you were passing through the Bell Telephone Laboratories today you might hear an electrical mouth speaking this odd talk, or whistling a series of musical notes, to a telephone transmitter.

This mouth can be made to repeat these sounds without variation. Every new telephone transmitter is tested by this mouth before it receives a laboratory or manufacturing O.K. for your use.

This is only one of the many tests to which telephone equipment is subjected in the Bell Telephone Laboratories. And there is a reason for the selection of those particular words.

It happens that the sentence, "Joe took father's shoe bench out," and its more lyrical companion, "She was waiting at my lawn," contain all the fundamental sounds of the English language that contribute to the intensity of sound in speech.

Busily at work in the interest of every one who uses the telephone is one of the largest laboratories in the world. The development of the telephone in this country is proof of the value of this research. In times like these, the work of the Bell Telephone Laboratories is especially important.
