WOVEN INTO THE FABRIC OF THE NATION

Daily, as on a magic loom, the countless activities of millions of people are woven together by telephone.

Home is linked with home.
Business to business. Community to community. City to city.

Friends and places nearby or far away are within the reach of a hand.

Without the telephone, time and space would rush between us and each would be so much alone.
And so many things would not get done.

It Will Be an Interesting Fall

Things Are Looking

UP for the Webfoots

By Art Litchman

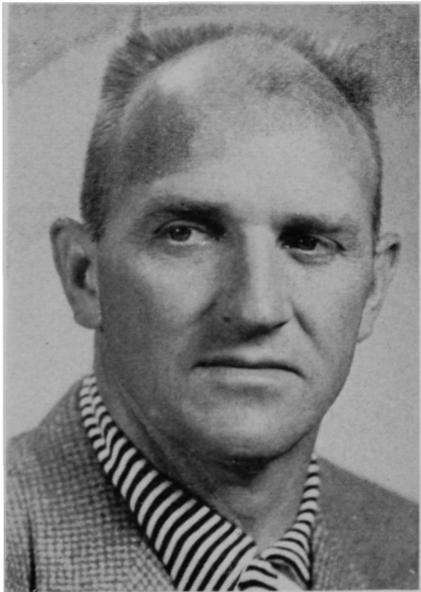

MORE experience, more depth, and a great home schedule.

That, in one short sentence, is the briefest kind of a report on the 1953 football prospects for Coach Len Casanova's Oregon Ducks.

There are two dozen lettermen, a dozen and a half sophomores, and a sprinkling of transfers scheduled to be at Hayward Field September 1 for the first day of practice and if present evaluations are accurate, they should make up the best Oregon team since 1949.

As for the schedule, it's a honey. UCLA, San Jose State, Idaho and Oregon State all play at Hayward Field and Washington and Southern California come to Portland's Multnomah Stadium. That leaves the Webfoots with only four games to be played away from home—Nebraska, Stanford, Washington State and California.

There is one other special schedule which will be of interest to Oregon fans within reach of a television set. On September 19 the Ducks play Nebraska at Lincoln and this game has been selected by the National Broadcasting Company and General Motors Corporation as its "Game of the Week" on television. You won't want to miss this, because it really adds a seventh game to the home schedule.

Oregon's new frosh coach is Willard Hammer, graduate of Springfield (Mass.) college, who played football there and at both WSC and Tulsa. He also was line coach for Springfield and has coached coast guard football teams.

Before turning to a discussion of the team, it might be well to post a reminder on your calendar about the deadline for preference season tickets for alumni. The date is August 31 and your application should be in the Athletic Ticket Office before that time. The season ticket at Eugene is $15 (UCLA on Oct. 3, San Jose State on Oct. 24, Idaho on Nov. 7 and Oregon State for the Homecoming Game on Nov. 21). In Portland there are two season prices available, $8 and $6, for the Washington game (Oct. 17) and the Southern California affair (Oct. 31).

Not only is the schedule a good one for the fans, but it's a tough one for the team. UCLA and Southern California are co-favorites for the PCC championship. California, Stanford, Washington, and Washington State are all rated as strong teams with a chance for good seasons, Idaho and Oregon State are always hard to handle, San Jose State is one of the leading independents and Nebraska is being tabbed as the surprise team of the Big Seven.

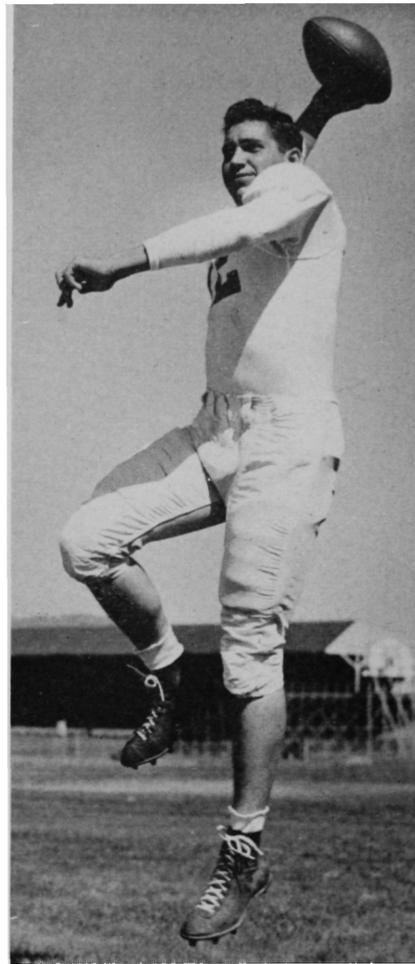

ANY discussion of schedules and tickets brings up the big question—"How good is the team?"

Naturally, that's always the toughest question to answer and the best man to summarize the situation is Coach Len Casanova. Just before he left for a series of summer coaching clinics for the Army in Japan Cas put it this way: "We had a fine spring practice. The squad worked very hard, there was good competition for positions and the spirit was wonderful. There is still plenty of work to do starting on September 1, but we believe the team will be improved over a year ago and will play interesting football this fall."

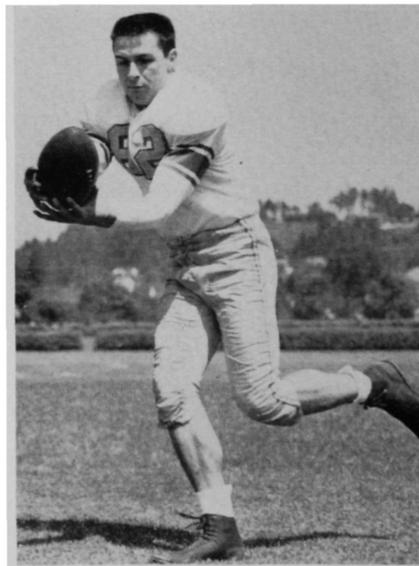

There are 26 lettermen ready to report when fall practice opens (24 from 1952 and two from 1951), the freshman squad of a year ago will have 18 men coming back, and there are three transfers and three players who have been with the squad before but did not win letters.

The draft status of one or two players is still in doubt and one other, Stan Dmochowsky has already been called. Dmochowsky was a transfer quarterback from San Bernardino JC who spent the spring season as a pitcher for Don Kirsch's Northern Division championship baseball team.

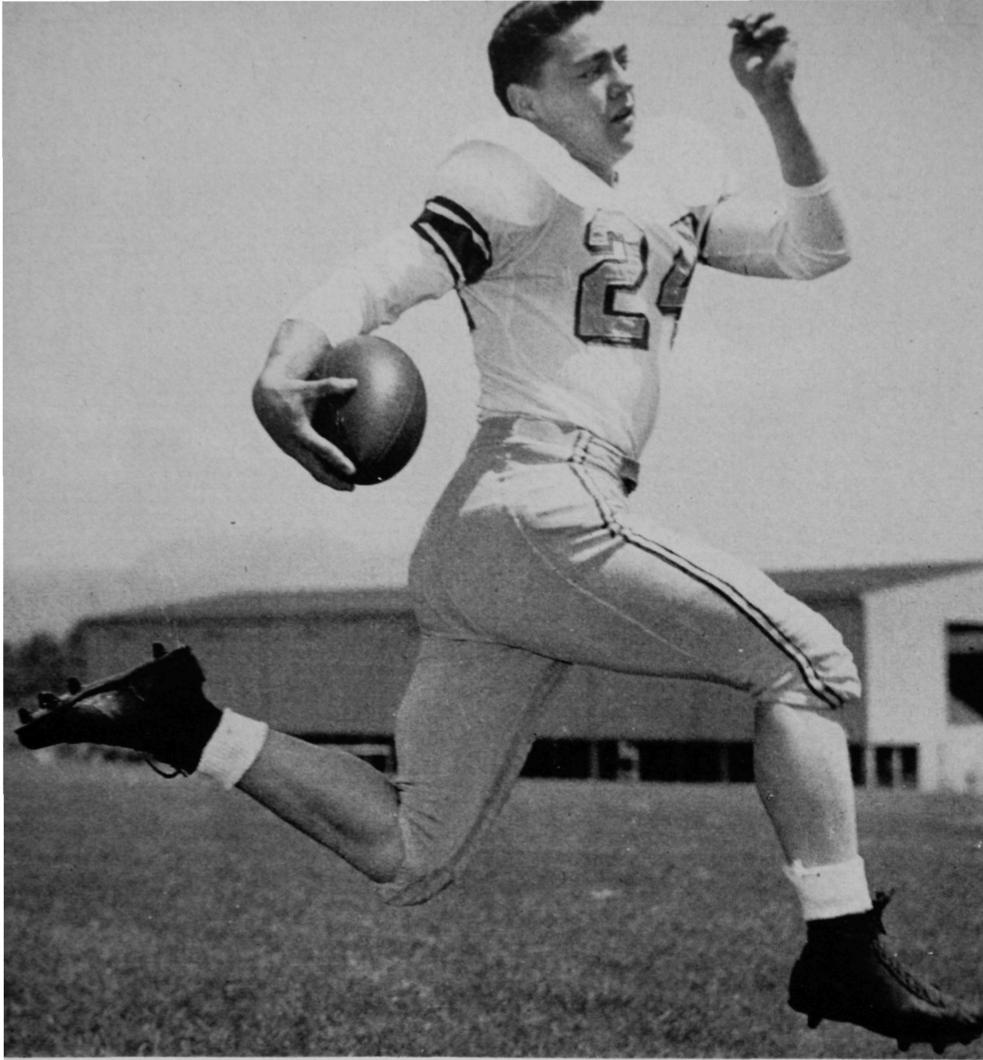

The line should be stronger than in either of Coach Casanova's first two seasons here, both in quality and quantity. The backfield again has good speed, the quarterbacks (George Shaw and Barney

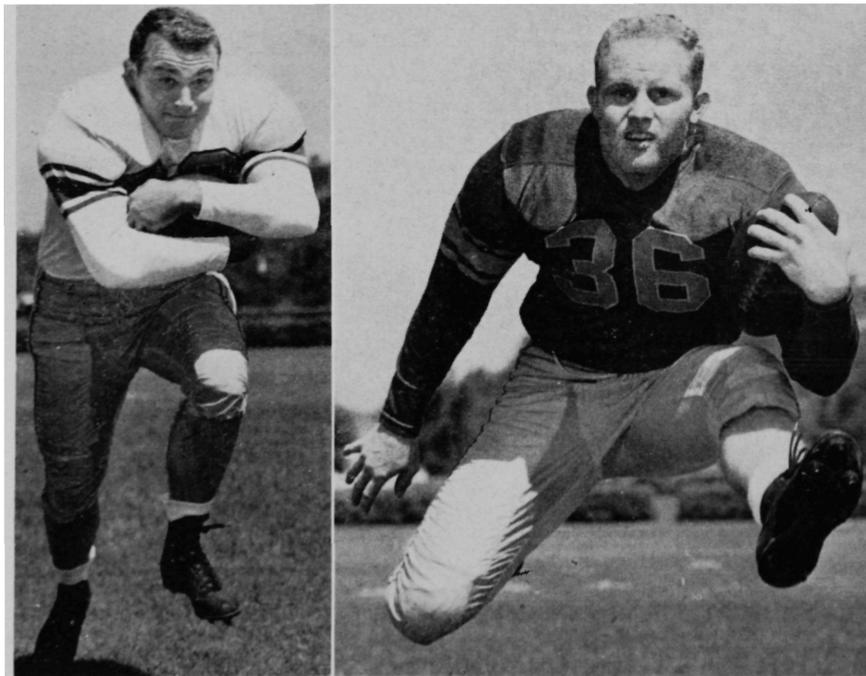

Barney Holland, quarterback

Holland) are excellent passers, and there appears to be better reserve strength at all positions except fullback.

There were some losses from a year ago and many of them will be missed next fall. Hal Dunham and Tom Novikoff are both with the San Francisco 49ers, Emmett Williams has joined the Chicago Cardinals and Monte Brethauer will be playing for the Baltimore Colts. The other graduation losses included Ron Lyman and Wayne Johnson at end, Dick Stoutt, Len Diederich and Hal Simmons at tackle, and Don Sloan at halfback.

To go into more detail, the prospects by position follow.

Coach Casanova switched several players to end during spring practice to get more strength and fill in the holes left by Brethauer, Lyman and Johnson. Emery Barnes, the fine defensive wingman of a year ago did a good job on both offense and defense and should have another excellent year. Ben Johnson, another defensive man last fall, is also back.

The new ends include John Reed, who played linebacker as a freshman in 1951. Chuck Greenley, a guard a year ago, Len Berrie, who lettered as a tackle last fall, Tom Elliott, a fine halfback who missed most of the 1952 season with an injured leg, and Dick Mobley, a rugged junior who played part of the 1948 season and has since spent four years in the service. Ted Overton, a converted quarterback who came to Oregon after serving in the Navy, and John Lighty have moved up from the freshman squad.

There are four letterman tackles, led by Hal Reeve, and the competition is going to be exceptionally keen at this position. The frosh squad has sent up Harry Johnson, Lon Stiner, Jr., Dick Barker and Jerry Nelson and Keith Tucker of Fresno JC has demonstrated considerable ability. Reeve rates as one of the top men in his position on the coast and his work will do much to help Oregon's improvement next fall.

Tucker developed rapidly and at the close of spring practice was teamed with Reeve on the first unit. Stiner and Johnson were right on their heels and were followed by Barker and Nelson. Two other lettermen, Ray MacLeod and Keith Peterson, also were in the fight and next fall Don Hedgepeth, a two-year veteran who played baseball this spring, will again be after one of the top spots.

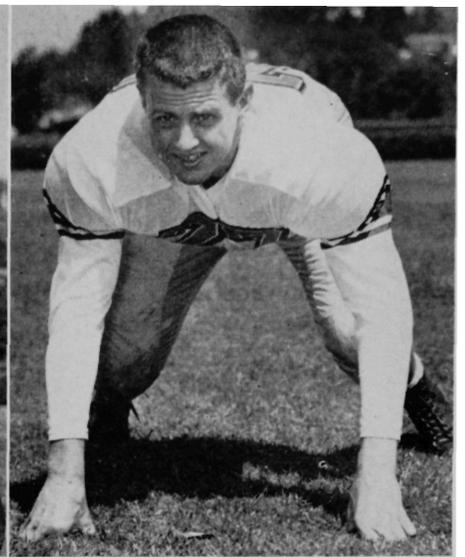

There is a chance that the guard spot will be weakened somewhat during the summer by the loss of Harry Mondale and Jim Jacques to the service. There is no definite decision yet on the part of their respective draft boards, but the coaching staff has moved Jack Patera back from tackle to fill in the hole in the event they do not return next fall.

Patera is a two-year veteran and ranks as one of the better linemen on the squad. Another new man, Tim Flaherty of Muir JC (Pasadena, Calif.) has made a strong bid for a starting job and he has been competition from several other promising middle linemen.

Ken Sweitzer, a regular last fall and a two-year letterman, George Mutchler, a fine sophomore from Wilmington, Calif., Stan Gottschalk, a non-letterman and Troy Bellah of the 1952 Ducklings are also in the scramble. If Mondale and Jacques also return the Ducks should be well off at this position.

The battle for the center spot was a tough one all spring. Ron Pheister, the ex-Portland star who played all the offense last season, had a slight edge at the close of the spring drills but he has the stiffest kind of competition. Dave Lowe, a 220-pounder from Eugene high who has spent the last two years in the air force, is once again on hand and the top four is rounded out by Art Weber and Chuck Laird. Weber moves up from the freshman squad and Laird is a veteran of two seasons with a talent for linebacking.

The quarterback position is once again ably manned by George Shaw and Barney Holland with Don Holt, a converted halfback, in reserve. Shaw has been an excellent passer for the past two years and he moves into his junior season with even brighter prospects ahead of him. The new substitution rule should make it possible to take even greater advantage of his ability on both offense and defense. Holland, a steady tosser and a fine signal caller, gives the Ducks considerably more talent at this key position than most teams can muster.

Oregon fans are going to see a number of new faces at the halfback posts. Dick James, the four-sport freshman from Grants Pass, Walt Gaffney, a hard-running transfer from San Bernardino J.C. Dick Pavlat, the ex-Astoria star, and Meb Buchanan, another sophomore, have all moved in to challenge the lettermen.

The veterans include Ted Anderson, the speedy Newport senior, Farrell Albright, Lloyd Powell and the Barber twins, Merritt and Manning. The competition here will be interesting to watch and this group should be able to add considerable punch to the offense.

At fullback the loss of Tom Novikoff was a serious one and there are three men battling for the job. Cece Hodges, the senior from Eugene who is equally at home at either fullback or halfback, has a slight edge in experience and also has had considerably more work on defense. Dean Van Leuven, a hard-running junior from Bandon, will also figure in the fight for the first job and the third man will be Larry Rose, a promising sophomore.

To wrap it up, the outlook is brighter, the schedule is terrific and it should be an interesting fall for all concerned.

Changes in Football Rules May Help Oregon and Will Probably Initiate

The Two-Bench System

“WHAT effect will the new substitution rule have on football in general and Oregon football in particular during the 1953 season?”

OLD OREGON has asked me to answer this question and I shall certainly do my best to give you as clear a picture as possible on what you may expect during the coming fall. I should point out, however, that none of us in football is certain what the new rule will bring about in our game. With that limitation, the points I shall discuss are what we expect will happen.

First, the new rule really divides the game into six periods as far as legal substitutions are concerned. A player may not re-enter the game once he has played in either the first or third periods. In the second and fourth periods he can come out anytime during the first 11 minutes and then re-enter during the final four minutes.

In short, the rule divides the game up like this: 15-11-4-halftime-15-11-4.

The rules committee has decided that each coach will be responsible for avoiding illegal substitutions. The penalty for a player re-entering the game before he is entitled to will be 15 yards and will be classified as unsportsmanlike conduct.

We have not decided what means we shall take to avoid having players illegally entering the game, but one of the ideas which has been presented involves two benches. One would be for “eligibles” and the other for “ineligibles.” Player A does not start the game, so he is on the eligible bench. When he goes into the game and comes out before the end of the first or third period he will go to the “ineligible” bench and stay there until the period is over and the entire squad is again eligible to enter the game.

We may or may not use this system, but it gives you an idea of what may have to be done to avoid confusion on the sidelines—and penalties.

We think the average fan will enjoy the game as much, if not more, under the new rules. One of the most important effects will be to give the fans a better chance to know the players. Under the unlimited substitution rule of the past (which produced the offensive-defensive platoon system) there was a great stream of players going on and off the field each time the ball changed hands. This made it rather difficult for the spectator to keep track of who was in the game, with the possible exception of the offensive backs and ends.

Some critics of the new rule think it will slow down the offense because players will become tired late in the game. We at Oregon don't think this to be true. The average player will play just about as much time as he did under the old rules. As an example, let's say you have two tackles of about equal ability. Under the old rules one would probably play offense and the other defense. Each would have averaged about 30 minutes per game. Under the new rules you would start one of the boys playing both offense and defense and then change the two as the game progressed. The result—each would probably average about the same amount of time.

There are several coaching problems involved in the changeover which may be of interest to alumni. Scouting is going to be of greater value to a coach than it has been. Our scouts can now look for individual player weaknesses, where in the past they had to concentrate on team defenses. For example, one of our opponents may have a fine offensive halfback who is weak on defense. Our scouts can determine this and we can hope to take advantage of the situation.

The new rules will also tend to standardize defensive play. In the platoon system it was possible, if personnel were available, to take a defensive unit and concentrate on just that phase of the game. Now, with the same players used on offense and defense it will be impossible to concentrate on defense just with a separate unit. We think this will help the squads which were never able to muster complete changes of personnel.

We also think it will help the smaller squad, like Oregon's, in that only 22 to 25 good players are now needed to field two pretty strong units. Under the unlimited substitution rule it took between 35 and 40 players to field two platoons.

Our biggest problem to date has been finding enough linebackers to give us a good defensive setup. From what we hear, most other teams are also finding this true. Good linebackers are always hard to develop and most of the top performers have never played much on offense. This makes it necessary to train linebackers to handle offensive duties or teach the players who can handle offensive assignments the tough job of linebacking. It's not an easy job either way.

Oregon probably will be helped by the new rule. It makes it possible for us to play teams with more personnel on a more equal basis, because they can no longer make full use of all their players. We also have had a great number of our boys playing both offense and defense during the past couple of seasons, and this should make it easier for them to adapt themselves to the new situation.

It should be an interesting fall and you probably will find it worth while to watch the developments as they affect both Oregon football and the game on a national scale.

Basketball leads the way to another profitable year

The Financial Side of Sports

BELIEVING that alumni of the University should know the full story behind athletic policies, Leo Harris and Ted Bouck, athletic director and athletic business manager respectively, have released complete figures on the past year's financial operations. This is the third successive year such a report is made available to OLD OREGON readers.

Surprisingly it was basketball which paced the way as a money-making sport. At most institutions, casaba activities are strictly a "break-even" operation, and frequently account for a substantial loss. Such was not the case at Oregon where basketball brought a handsome profit of $12,707.79, accountable mainly by an increase of approximately 26 per cent in gate receipts over the previous year.

For the first time in many years, football, which usually picks up the slack for sports which bring little income, showed a slight loss of $1,762.41. However, radio rights and a share of Rose Bowl proceeds, most of which come from football, produced $34,279.13 or the approximate margin of profit which the department realized for the year's operations.

It has been said that popcorn sales keep the movie houses in business these days. While special activities such as the sale of programs and concessions did not account for the total profit, they did bring a sizeable income of $7,292.00.

Other income producers were in the "miscellaneous" categories. Special events such as the appearance of the Harlem Globetrotters combined with the sale of faculty season tickets showed a profit of $5,017.54. Student fees, a relatively stable item, showed a profit of $13,275.38 after administration costs were deducted. Finally, rental fees for the use of athletic buildings and grounds brought $968.76.

Baseball and track, which yield little income at the gate, account for considerable expense. Even with a Northern Division pennant on the flagpole, the Webfoot nine produced only $1,407.18 in gate receipts which included two well attended playoff games at Stanford. Yet expenses increased more than $3,000 over the previous year because of the extra travel to the playoffs. Track expenses went up, too, with a $2,000 increase over last year.

This brings us down to a $35,845.65 gross operation profit for the year's operations. From this amount, $5,355.93 for investment in capital improvements is deducted, which went toward new concrete stands, paving, and a new backstop on the Howe field baseball diamond. One-third of the seats were given a concrete floor with another one-third to be added next year. Also on next year's schedule is the addition of approximately 500 seats in McArthur court.

Predicting next year's profit is not easy, but it is safe to say "things are looking up." An attractive home schedule, both in basketball and football, should stimulate additional gate receipts. A steady increase in enrollment will be reflected in more income from student fees.

Whatever the outcome, Oregon alumni can well be proud of its University's financial record in athletics. Bouquets of congratulations to the athletic staff for sound administrative operations are well deserved, especially in an era when financing athletic programs is causing no small number of headaches to college administrators throughout the country.

President Newburn's Resignation

Brings to Mind the Story of Eight Years of

THE story of Harry K. Newburn's connection with the University of Oregon is a story of eight years of progress unequalled in the history of the institution. It is a story of new buildings, additions to the faculty, of highest enrollment—a host of superlatives.

Dr. Newburn came to the University July 1, 1945, as its eighth president. He brought a first hand knowledge of educational problems, gained in experience extending across the entire periphery of education from elementary teacher and superintendent to liberal arts college dean.

He was primarily responsible for the building program which has more than doubled the value of the physical plant, and which has included the erection of such structures as the Erb Memorial Union, Carson hall, the University theater wing of Villard, the music school annex, the science building, Commonwealth hall and the new heating plant. In addition, many of the older campus structures have been completely renovated, making them much more serviceable. At present, construction is beginning on Allen hall, to be the new home of the journalism school, final project in the long list which Dr. Newburn directed.

During his eight years, the campus has remarked often upon the growth and improvement of the library which has brought the University recognition throughout the nation. Today the Oregon library's acquisitions are the highest of any library west of the Rockies with the exception of California.

Nor has his attention been centered only on buildings and books. These eight years have seen a marked strengthening of the University's academic program and its faculty. Dr. Newburn's leadership resulted in faculty salary levels being raised from near the bottom in comparison with other institutions to a position of equality with competing universities. More research grants and honors of national importance have come to the faculty than at any other period in the University's history.

During Dr. Newburn's administration there was full attention paid also to curriculum development, which saw a merging of traditional approaches and modern needs into a program designed to produce educated men and women. At Iowa State university, where he was dean of the college of liberal arts before coming to Oregon, he completed a reorganization of the curricula of the liberal arts college that re-

Hello . . .

A lot of ground was broken at the University during Dr. Newburn's administration. Here he participates with the late Ernest Haycox '23 in a tree planting that marked the beginning of construction of the two-million dollar Erb Memorial Student Union building in 1947.

Oregon had some football victories, too, in Dr. Newburn's eight years. At this buffet dinner in 1948, he helped honor the Web-foot football team which won the co-championship of the coast conference and went on to play in the Cotton Bowl. Eugene's Mayor Ed Johnson '27 carves.

Progress

ceived recognition from educators throughout the country. He brought that experience to Oregon where he was largely responsible for reorganizing the curriculum to require two years of general education as a prerequisite for majoring in any of the professional areas. The Oregon program, like that of Iowa, can be characterized as one based, not on tradition, but on the needs of students.

President Newburn's eight years embraced the considerable job of restoring and building to higher standards an institution which had undergone the attrition of the war years, the post-war period of highest enrollments and the influx of veterans, and the planning for a future which promises much.

Always ready for a challenge, he has a big one in his new job as president of the Educational Television and Radio Center. The struggle to build a sound foundation for educational television in the country has been said to present an opportunity in education "unequalled since the invention of printing." It is to his credit that Harry Newburn admits the toughness of his new assignment. But it is also a safe bet that this very toughness is one of the chief reasons why he is joining the fight.

... and Goodbye

The 75th anniversary celebration brought many prominent figures to the Oregon campus to help observe the University's diamond jubilee year. Here, the president chats with Dr. James Conant, then president of Harvard university. Other visitors ranged from Historian Arthur Toynbee to Labor Leader Walter Reuther.

In the Good Ol' Summertime

Classes and workshops, spiced with terrace dances and picnics, held forth at the university's annual summer session with enrollment reaching 1,568 students. Eighty-five per cent of those enrolled for the eight-week course were teachers.

Students attended classes on Oregon's emerald-green campus, greener than usual due to heavy spring rains. Some had time for extra work like the coed from New York City who earned $1.56 picking 52 pounds of cherries at three cents a pound (and then quit).

Most of them, however, concentrated on special interest workshops. Featured this year were sessions on the study of literature, family financial security education, communications in school administration, curriculum leadership, county superintendents, the modern school library, problems in the treatment of stuttering, education for later maturity and athletic coaching school.

A high school social studies conference was held in late July and a special workshop for Eugene teachers opened August 17.

Dean Paul B. Jacobson of the school of education was director of the summer program.

A special two-weeks post session for graduate students enrolled in the regular session was held from August 17 to 28 with Dr. Arthur C. Hearn and Dr. Miles C. Romney of the school of education in charge.

Extra-curricular activities included a Sunday at Crater Lake, with a chartered bus taking the students early in the morning, returning just before midnight; dancing, the annual summer session picnic, golf, tennis and swimming.

GOOD FOOD, beautiful Oregon scenery and students and faculty out for a day of relaxation all made for a successful picnic held during the summer session at Armitage Park. BASEBALL was the game of the day with Dick Williams, SU director, as umpire, and Dr. James Logsdon of Sherwood, Wis., visiting professor, at bat for the faculty team. DEAN Paul B. Jacobson chats with Mrs. Alex Jardine of Moline, Ill., wife of visiting professor.

Old Oregon

Young Musicians Visit

Harmony-minded high school students, numbering 180, converged on the campus this summer for the Sixth Annual High School Music Summer Session held June 29 to July 17.

The "three-week college students," came from nearly every community in Oregon as well as from California, Washington, Nevada and Columbia, B. C. Housed in campus dormitories, they paid their own expenses as well as their moderate tuition fees.

Heading the session for the third year was Ira D. Lee, assistant professor in brass and assistant director of bands. Purpose of the program is to further the student's training so he or she will become a better member of the high school band, orchestra or chorus back home.

Classes were held daily Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. and until noon on Saturday. Sectional and group rehearsals were scheduled daily for the three divisions, wind, string and voice, as well as a session in theory.

The students were organized into two bands, one orchestra and one chorus and two public concerts were presented as well as one solo night. The three top performers were Wilbur Jensen, Denmark, Ore., trumpeter; Nan Wood, Eugene, flutist; and Donna Gumpert, Bend, piano. The night preceding the last group concert, a stunt night was held to relax the students and they had a hilarious evening of fun.

"It was the best year we've had since I've been here," commented Lee. "Only students who have had previous training are eligible to attend and the calibre this year was tops."

This program is only one of the many educational projects sponsored by the University of Oregon for high school students of the state. This type of activity is typical of the services offered by the university.

Students Give to WSSF

For the second consecutive year, Oregon students topped all other colleges or universities in the Pacific Northwest region in contributions to the World Student Service Fund.

The University's check totaled $1,810.92. Washington was second with $1,260 and OSC third with $1,112.41.

Students raised the money during winter and spring terms with an "ugly man contest," a car wash, auction and an all-campus vodvil.

"School Days"

Fall term students soon will converge on the university campus with dates for "New Student Week" set for September 13-19. Registration will take place during the same period. Classes start Monday, September 21.

Rush week starts Friday, September 18, with pledging to be held Wednesday morning, September 23.

New Vice Chancellor Arrives

Dr. John R. Richards, vice chancellor of the Oregon State System of Higher Education, has arrived on the University campus to take over this newly-created post. He will serve as secretary to the board as well as an aide to Chancellor Charles D. Byrne.

The former New York educator, most recently with New York university, was enthusiastic in his praise of the Oregon system, which he described as "fully matured," in that goals have been defined for the several institutions of higher education in the system. In this respect, he said, Oregon has the best system in the nation.

Dr. Richards earned degrees at Pennsylvania State college and received his Ph.D. in 1935 from the University of Chicago. Long active in educational administrative affairs, he was in 1933 assistant to the dean of the college of liberal arts and director of arts and science extension at Pennsylvania State. He served for a time at Wayne university, going in 1941 to Washington as special assistant to the director of price division of OPA.

During the war he was on active duty with the navy, leaving in 1945 to become executive assistant to the president of Wayne university. In 1951 he was appointed special assistant to the secretary of the army, a position which he still holds on a consultative basis.

At N.Y.U. he was assistant to the executive vice chancellor and director of research. He set up an office of research for coordination of research contracts and established the Institute of Mathematical Sciences.

Although he has spent most of his life in the east, he was a resident of Multnomah, Oregon, in 1910 as a small child. Here with him now are his wife and two children, a daughter, 12, and a son, 15.

Jessup Wins Fulbright

Dr. Bertram E. Jessup, associate professor of philosophy at the University of Oregon, is en route to Europe where he will do research work for a year at the University of Heidelberg under a Fulbright grant.

Dr. Jessup is accompanied by his wife and daughter, Gertrude. The family will visit various places in Europe, among them Dr. Jessup's birthplace at Malmo, Sweden.

Miss Jessup will attend school in Europe for a short time and return to Bryn Mawr College next year.

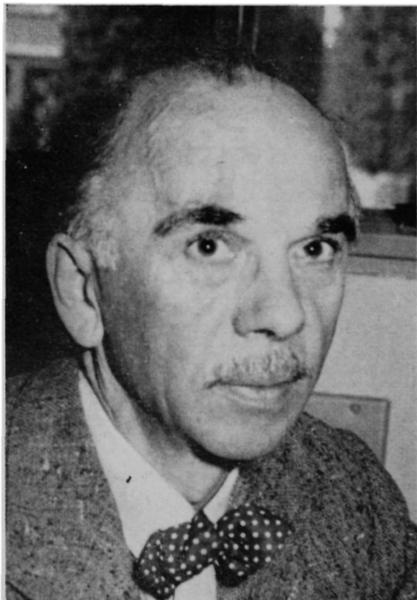

Nelson Honored

The 1953 "Award for Outstanding Achievement" of the American College Public Relations association was awarded this summer to Lyle M. Nelson '41, director of public services in the University of Oregon.

The award, given July 1 at the annual banquet of the association in Salt Lake City, was in recognition of Nelson's role in the University's 75th anniversary celebration last year.

The citation characterized Nelson as "a professional practitioner of the highest integrity and boundless resource in educational public relations, whose effective leadership and personal contribution to the interpretation of higher education, its underlying principles and precepts, have brought new understanding and appreciation to the art of higher teaching, honor and recognition to his university, and to him the respect and admiration of his colleagues."

Nelson has been at the University since 1947. As a student he was editor of the Oregon Daily Emerald and of OLD OREGON.

The University's Veep

A tribute is paid to Burt Brown Barker
by New York Alumni

By John MacGregor '23

An Oregon art pioneer from a pioneer family, Dr. Burt Brown Barker, vice president emeritus of the University, was paid warm tribute by the New York Alumni club at a special dinner earlier this year in that city. Leon Culbertson, '23, presided. Mrs. Barker accompanied her husband and shared in the honors.

Attending the dinner was Leonebel Jacobs, famous New York artist and Oregon alumna, who painted Dr. Barker's portrait last summer while visiting in Oregon. At the dinner this portrait was presented to the University by John MacGregor '23. It will be hung in the University.

Reprinted on this page is the tribute paid to Dr. Barker. The "appreciation" has been adopted by the officers and directors of the club, and was read by MacGregor, New York lawyer and well-known alumnus.

AS a special privilege this evening, we have a chance to speak about and to Burt Brown Barker, vice president emeritus of the University of Oregon since 1947. In spite of supposed retirement from honorable service, he still carries on as he has since 1928, when he joined the faculty as professor and vice president. Presidents may come and go, but Barker remains, as always, the devoted friend and counsellor of the University. He has been, and now is, the veritable embodiment of all that was implied in Prince Campbell's often repeated and rightly famous phrase—"For the ultimate good of the University."

Prehistoric records say Waitsburg, Washington, was his birthplace. He belongs by educational adoption to Chicago and Harvard, through the practice of law to Chicago and New York, by honorary degree to Oregon, and by a quarter of a century of unmatched service to the University itself.

Long a lawyer in active practice, he began to display early (and has continued late) his interests in writing, historical research and art. In his relation to the University, the richness of his interests and their increasing range are exemplified in countless ways. Proctor's statue, on campus, of The Pioneer Mother was a gift in honor of Barker's pioneer mother, Lucinda Brown. Priceless gifts of books and historical manuscripts are in the library because his keen eye found them and his generous spirit gave them. His continuing interest in Oregon history has been supplemented by the bestowal of his competence, energy and time. His support of statewide interests in art and in historical research have been noteworthy. Recently, he served as chairman of the state commission to place the statues of Dr. McLaughlin and Jason Lee in the National Statuary Hall in Washington.

Barker's visits to England to search out records of the Hudson's Bay company and his further adventures with them are a great story to be remembered. The Hudson's Bay Record Society has been publishing their rare items during the last fifteen years. In 1950 its volume contained the Snake River Journals of Peter Ogdin.

Dr. Barker was asked to write the introduction, some eighty pages. He thus became the first American to be asked to contribute to this monumental work and his response was handsome. We are mindful of the fact that these archives contain the finest sources of material on the history of the Oregon country in its early days.

His restoration of the house in Newburg in which Herbert Hoover, Barker's lifelong friend and some time associate, made his boyhood home, provides another aspect of our guest's interest in historical places.

THE bare listing of his support of fine arts in Portland and the offices he has held with the Fine Arts Museum there, give clues to more of his accomplishments. This cataloguing of events, interests and contributions in writing, in money and in ever-new inspirations, could go on and on. We should need a good cross index to be sure of including all the tangible recorded items. Then we should have to make another endless file to take note of all the warm personal interests, individual encouragements, friendships and abiding faiths in persons and in the mission of the University as a pioneer in historical research in the Northwest. This listing should include his emphasis of fine arts as an intellectual interest, envisaged by the lively and creative imagination of this man whom we take pleasure in honoring.

You may well ask how the University has been able to afford such a man while competition for gifted faculty is so keen. His salary as vice president over all these years was $1.00 per year, raised percentage-wise in 1946, with other members of the faculty, to $1.31 per annum. We can think of other remunerations, emoluments and rewards which have kept him steady.

His unswerving loyalty to the University presidents, from Arnold Bennett Hall to Harry K. Newburn, has been repaid in kind. Scores of history students have risen to pay tribute to his thought and vision. Beginning scholars, aided by financial assistance and cheered by his recognition, have climbed from obscurity. Generations of faculty and students alike have been rejoiced that he retired from the law in such lively fashion.

We all owe to you, Burt Brown Barker, pioneer son of a pioneer mother, a great debt. Perhaps we could try to repay some of it by attempting to imitate your unselfish and wide range of service. We know we cannot now match it. We can have no thought of reward except the inner satisfaction of making some return to the University which gave us our perspective and which helps us now, as William James said, "to know a good man when we see him."

And so, we, of the New York City alumni, salute you, good sir, and the gracious lady (originally from Connecticut) who has been with you through these fruitful years. May the very history of the Pacific Northwest, which you have rendered available and made articulate to others, and a part of which you have actually become yourselves, furnish for you both extra jewels in your crowns, provided, of course, that the presentation of such jewels be long, yea very long, delayed.

Pre-Game Parties

William J. Macy '44, Portland, will serve as chairman for the annual pre-game parties in Portland this fall, according to an announcement by R. Robert Smith '40, Portland Alumni association president.

The traditional gatherings will take place in the Rose Bowl of the Multnomah Hotel on Friday, October 16, prior to the Oregon-Washington game and on Friday, October 30, the eve of the Oregon-Southern California contest.

No less than five hundred Oregon alumni have been present at each pre-game party in Portland held since the war, and an even greater turnout is expected this year due to the increased interest in these two fine games and the predicted potentialities of the Oregon varsity.

Smith also announced that plans are under way for the sixth annual Portland Alumni Institute to be held next spring. The program features outstanding members of the University faculty and a speaker of national importance.

KNOW YOUR OFFICERS

Ralph J. Brown

Civic-minded Ralph J. Brown, a busy attorney and mayor of Prineville, resigned the latter position in the fall of 1951 and headed for Europe with his wife, Margaret, and daughter, Jane, 9.

To get a rest from his many duties in the eastern Oregon city, Brown and his family purchased an automobile in England and spent four months touring the British Isles and the continent, covering about 4,000 miles.

But as soon as he returned home last year, the city fathers put him right back to work by appointing him on the city council to fill a vacancy. So he's back in harness.

In addition, he was recently elected chairman of the board of directors of the Pioneer Memorial Hospital in Prineville.

Occupation-wise, he is president of the Central Oregon Title and Loan Co. in Prineville and practices law under the firm name of Brown & Kuhn.

As Crook county representative for the Oregon Alumni Association, he advises that his special interests are in a better football team and the law school from which he received an LL.B. in 1934. He is a member of Theta Chi fraternity.

California Trips

Approximately 90 Oregon alumni will board two special coaches of the Southern Pacific's Shasta Daylight in San Francisco November 20 for the first annual "Duck's Trek Home" trip sponsored by the Bay Area Duck Club.

The party will arrive in Eugene the same evening in time to participate in the full slate of Homecoming Weekend festivities. The return trip to San Francisco will be made on Sunday, November 21.

Special accommodations have been arranged at the Eugene Hotel, and tickets will be provided to all Homecoming events including the luncheon, the Oregon OSC football game, and the Homecoming dance. Price for the entire package, including transportation, housing, and tickets to all Homecoming events, is fifty dollars.

A limited number of reservations are still available and may be secured by calling Clinton Paine '43, trip chairman, at YUkon 6-4400 in San Francisco. Others serving on the committee are Fred Martin '26 and Ken Oliphant '44, Bay Area Duck Club president.

"This is the first time to our knowledge that such an undertaking has ever been staged by our local club," announced Paine, "and we hope the response on the initial trip will indicate that this should be an annual affair."

Preliminary plans for a trip to the Oregon-Stanford game in Palo Alto on September 26 for alumni in Southern California are also under way. The trip will be made by chartered plane, leaving Los Angeles on Saturday morning and returning the following day. Further information on this special flight will be made through a mail announcement to all Southern California alumni later this month.

Letters Win Award

A first place award for direct mail promotion activities went to the University of Oregon Alumni association in a competition sponsored by the American Alumni council. Presentation was made at the annual conference of the council held in Washington, D. C., in mid-July.

The award was based on a series of five unique gadget-type membership renewal letters which the association has used for the past year. This was the first year such an award was made. All entries were judged by a committee of professional direct mail specialists headed by Edward N. Mayer, Jr., president of James Gray, Inc. of New York City, one of the nation's largest direct mail firms.

The special citation read: "For significant achievement in the field of direct mail promotion activities, this special citation is awarded to the University of Oregon Alumni Association in the competition sponsored by the American Alumni Council. Dated at Washington, D. C. this 14th day of July, 1953."

James W. Frost '47 moves up in radio as he takes an important position in Los Angeles.

His initial radio experience came when he joined the staff of the Oregon Journal in 1950 and was assigned to the Journal's station KPOJ in the sales division.

Following graduation from the University of Oregon, he received his Master of Business Administration from Harvard Graduate School. He was on active duty in the Army during World War II for 46 months in addition to his more recent Korean service.

Both of the new officers took offices as of July 1 and will each serve a term of one year. Corey succeeds Charles R. Holloway, Jr. '35 of Portland as president. Vester steps into the spot vacated by Corey upon his elevation to the presidency.

Corey forecasts another bright year for the association. "The accomplishments of the past several years will serve as good stepping stones for bigger and better things for the University and its alumni association," he remarked. "Much emphasis will be placed on the alumni scholarship program begun last year. Through increased financial support from individual alumni and community scholarship programs, we hope to bring to the campus increasing numbers of promising students which our University deserves."

Previously in 1949-51, Anderson served as chairman of District VIII of the Council.

One of his first duties as director was to edit and prepare for publication the accounts of the various convention sessions. They eventually will be printed in book form and distributed to members as a permanent record of the annual convention.
