Activity Rustles in the Art Museum

Miles Apart yet Heart-to-Heart by Long Distance

When you're far away from someone, there's nothing like a telephone call to bring you near. The sound of a warm, familiar voice and the eager exchange of personal news is almost as satisfying as an actual visit.

Near or far, wherever they are, friends appreciate your calling. Long Distance calls cost little—especially after six every evening and all day Sunday. Then you can talk from Cleveland to Pittsburgh for as little as 45¢; Chicago to Omaha for only 85¢; New York to Los Angeles for only $2. (These are the 3-minute, station-to-station rates and do not include federal excise tax.)

Somewhere today there is someone who would like to hear your voice.

YOU SAVE TIME WHEN YOU CALL BY NUMBER
When you're calling out-of-town, it will speed your call if you can give the operator the number you want. It's easier, too.

To and From

ONE of the benefits of a University campus not often thought about is that it provides "open spaces" to walk about in or just to look about. A small benefit, to be sure, but nevertheless important. As students and faculty hurry to and fro in these campus expanses we can surmise from the intent faces, the hurrying bodies that frequently they are silently cursing the distances separating them from their goals—be it the PE class up University street hill or the library four long blocks away from Carson.

When it is raining (as we must admit it usually is), the space becomes even more an enemy. The pace of the "between-class" rush quickens and energetic but incautious Webfoots run and jump puddles in an effort to make speed and agility do as raincoat and overshoes. At such a time we might accept as a good proposal jamming the whole University into one great building where travel from class to class and place to place would be in dry, warm corridors and elevators.

At other times the proposal wouldn't win as much approval. On a warm spring day, for example, with billowing clouds and bright sunshine and a touch of green on the trees we have a better appreciation of the open space. A similar time, though less overtly appreciated, is when the campus is diffused in fog or mist. Then even the least perceptive sophomore must become aware of its spaciousness. The familiar buildings have been separated from their surrounding trees and walks. Their bulk looms, and the walk from Commonwealth square to the library is in a strange land of almost abstract rectangular masses which seem miles away.

SUCH a time is represented on this month's cover of OLD OREGON. It is a lonely scene, as is any in which man is aware of the spaciousness of his surroundings. But it is a satisfying scene, too, in that into the loneliness is intruded the feeling of the University and the works of man which include both the filling of spaces and the emptying of them.

It is possible that we are talking about too much more than the feeling one experiences in most any park which is large enough to make man feel small. On the other hand, it seems subtly, yet substantially different. The campus is much more than a park (especially a park of the naturalistic kind) which often is a kind of a denial or de-emphasis of the work of man.

The campus asserts the works of man at the same time that it reminds man of his smallness. It provides perspective that is lacking when we don't have space enough. Somehow, this very physical aspect of the campus demonstrates the more intellectual and abstract idea of the University.

Next time you get back, take a look at the open spaces and check up on us.—P.J.D.

deserted, sometimes overlooked, art museum*

OREGON'S Oriental art museum has been fitted into a new administrative pattern designed to spotlight the Murray Warner Collection of Oriental Art housed in the museum.

Donated to the University in 1921 by Mrs. Gertrude Bass Warner as a memorial to her husband, Maj. Murray Warner, the collection was moved into the museum when that building was erected in 1933.

Since that time the collection has reflected the deep interest in the life of the peoples of the Far East felt by Major and Mrs. Warner. Now, with the administrative change, it is being further promoted on campus.

Paul S. Dull, associate professor of political science and history, took over as director in September, and Wallace S. Baldinger, associate professor of art, became curator. However, Dull regretfully submitted his resignation in December because his teaching load was too great to allow him to continue as director.

Baldinger has assumed responsibility for the director's duties for the present time. (Both men spent the 1952-53 school year in Japan, on their most recent trips to the Far East.)

Assisted by a museum staff of four—a secretary, library assistant, and two custodians—Baldinger is carrying out a program along the lines of the original feeling behind the gift to the University. That is promoting good will between peoples of the Orient and the United States, through arousing popular interest and understanding, on campus, for Oriental art. The collection is also utilized by the Far Eastern studies program.

During the present school term the museum is honoring the return of Commodore Matthew Perry to Japan in 1854 to open up trade relations and establish diplomatic contact. Theme of the centennial celebration is how Japanese art reflects a change in thinking from the time before Perry's expedition to that following it.

On exhibition are Japanese color prints, made after Perry's expedition, and reflecting the impact of the West on Japan. They are called the Nagasaki prints, named after their place of origin. Also on display are the tools used to make this kind of print, and four costly sculptures of Buddhist gods.

It is the plan of the museum staff, according to Baldinger, to put on a program of this type every year. This year Jiro Harada, staff member of the National Museum, Ueno Park, Tokyo, is being featured at the celebration.

HOURS of the museum this year reflect the extension of the pattern of art for the University family in general. The museum is open from 1 to 5 p.m. seven days a week, and from 7 to 10 p.m. Monday through Thursday. Previously it had only been open from 2 to 4 p.m.

Photographs may now be taken in the museum; previously they could not.

The museum, the only windowless building on campus (to prevent sunlight from damaging delicate works), was officially opened on alumni day, June 10, 1933. Its architect was Ellis F. Lawrence, dean of the school of architecture and allied arts from the school's founding in 1914 until his death in 1946. Lawrence had hoped that the museum would become a museum of fine arts and eventually the nucleus of the architecture and art school, which would be constructed around it.

The structure was established as a memorial to Prince Lucien Campbell, president of the University from 1902 until his death in 1925. President Campbell had done much to initiate the program for building the museum, and his work was carried on by his successor, Arnold Bennett Hall, and by Mrs. George T. Gerlinger, regent, who headed the drive for funds.

These dolls represent General Toyotomi Hideyoshi, and his generals, who ended the Japanese civil wars and united the country under a central government in the 16th century. They honor the boys of Japan on boys' day. The mounted figure, top center, is General Hideyoshi.

The Warner collection itself is older than the museum. Mrs. Warner donated the collection in 1921, and furnished additional articles obtained on five trips to the Orient from 1921 to 1929.

She became the director of the museum, serving in that capacity until her death in 1951. Museum librarian from 1929 until November, 1953, was Mrs. Mabel K. Garner, who carried much of the load during Mrs. Warner's time, and all of it after Mrs. Warner's death.

The collection, begun when Mrs. Warner and her husband were living in Shanghai, contains an estimated 3,500 articles. They range from Japanese Netsuke, which are tiny figures worn on the person, to imposing-looking throne chairs, made of blackwood with cloisonne panels, from the palace of Chinese Emperor Ch'ien Lung.

The collection is mostly Japanese and Chinese, but it also includes art pieces from Cambodia, in Indo-China, Korea, Tibet and Mongolia.

Many articles are protected from even the inside light by screens. These articles include Manchu coats, two Japanese palanquins—carriers which held a man or woman and which were carried by servants, and two wedding chests, inlaid with Mother of Pearl, from Korea.

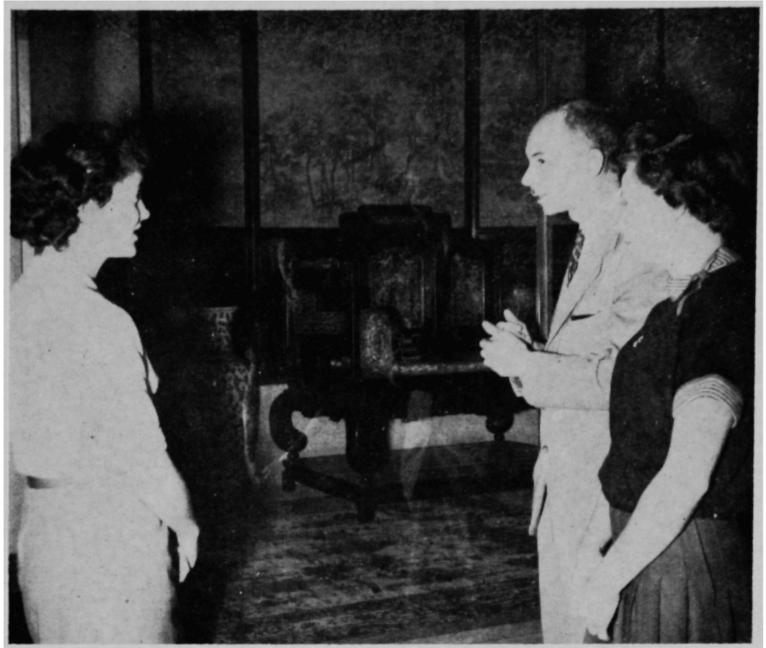

The Japanese color prints on display represent a small fraction of the total number in the collection, about 2,000. Most of them are stored, as are hundreds of sculptures and other articles.

With not enough room to display all of the 3,500 parts of the collection, Baldinger says the museum staff hopes to have a freight elevator installed, possibly in a new wing of the building, so that a "home" for all the articles may be set up in the basement. This will be used when the articles are stored. Also, it will release for display purposes the many small storage rooms throughout the two main floors, now containing the stored articles.

It's a rich collection of art that the museum contains. Baldinger and his staff are working to make as much of it as possible easily accessible to students and faculty at Oregon, in the spirit of Mrs. Warner's gift to the University.

This model shows the dress worn by Japanese women in the 18th century.

Museum Curator Wallace S. Baldinger shows students the throne chair which belonged to Chinese Emperor Ch'ien Lung (1736-96). The emperor had a throne chair in every room in the palace that he might enter.

Boys' Day is held in Japan on the fifth day of the fifth month. Boys in the family are honored with dolls such as this one representing Shogun Minamoto Mitsunaka (946-986) which symbolizes the traits most honored in a Japanese man or represents heroes who had them. Friends of the Library

by Carl H. Hintz, librarian

ONE of the interesting movements of the last 25 years in connection with American libraries has been the growth of "Friends of the Library" groups. Inasmuch as the Association of Patrons and Friends of the University of Oregon Library is a part of this development it may be of some interest to sketch in the broad outlines of the movement as a preliminary to describing our local group.

Like many other library related activities the movement originated in Europe where one of the earliest groups was established in 1913 in connection with the Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris. The earliest recorded Friends of the Library group in the United States was founded in 1925 at Harvard University and Yale soon adopted a similar plan. The idea spread rapidly and now extends to all types of libraries and to all sections of the United States.

In general, the purposes of the college and university groups of Friends are to "constitute a body of sleuths to discover idle books in private libraries of the community; duplicate copies which have been read by the owner and can easily be spared; large numbers of books in special fields collected perhaps by one member of a family (in which the other heirs are not equally interested) and libraries upon which the owners are paying substantial taxes each year, amounts which could be saved if the books were given to the library. Once located, plans are made to interest the owners of such idle books." Statements from other sources refer to the stimulation of alumni and friends to aid the library through gifts of money, and to extend and develop friendly attitudes which accompany donations and endowments to perpetuate gifts.

ALTHOUGH the government and organization of Friends of the Library groups show a variety of forms informality appears to be a common characteristic. The methods utilized for financing gifts and activities also vary considerably. Some groups have membership fees of different classes; others make any sized check a membership requirement.

The Friends of the Bancroft Library, University of California, are asked to contribute ten dollars (or more) a year while the Friends of the Library of the University of Portland may choose from among the following types of membership: contributing at three dollars a year, regular at ten dollars a year, sustaining at fifteen dollars a year, or life at one hundred dollars. Designation as a patron is awarded upon payment of one thousand dollars.

The Association of Patrons and Friends of the University of Oregon Library was officially founded on May 1, 1940 when, at a dinner meeting, a constitution was adopted and a Board of twenty directors elected. According to a broadside printed by John Henry Nash in 1940 the Association "is an informal society of booklovers who are interested in promoting the welfare of the Library, especially by helping to secure additions to its resources. . . It is proposed that in addition to paying the expenses of the Association and purchasing books, we bring to the attention of the public some of the resources of the Library, its facilities for safely housing and wisely administering library materials, report outstanding gifts and acquisitions, and bring literary men and women of distinction to address the members."

THE Association has always conducted its affairs on a somewhat informal basis. The Board of Directors, now consisting of thirty members, is elected at the annual membership meeting held in the early part of May as a part of Library Day. In general, there is a strong tendency to reelect directors for successive terms. The Board selects its own officers consisting of a Chairman, Vice-Chairman, Secretary and Treasurer. The University Librarian customarily serves as secretary and the University Business Manager as Treasurer. These four officers and one director constitute the five member executive committee.

The annual dues of one dollar have not been increased since the Association was first formed in spite of mounting costs. The membership has shown a considerable fluctuation in size ranging from a low of 38 paid members to a high of 287. As of December 1953 there were about 150 dues paying members. The Call Number, published by the University of Oregon Library Staff Association, containing material about the Library and related subjects, is sent to all members of record.

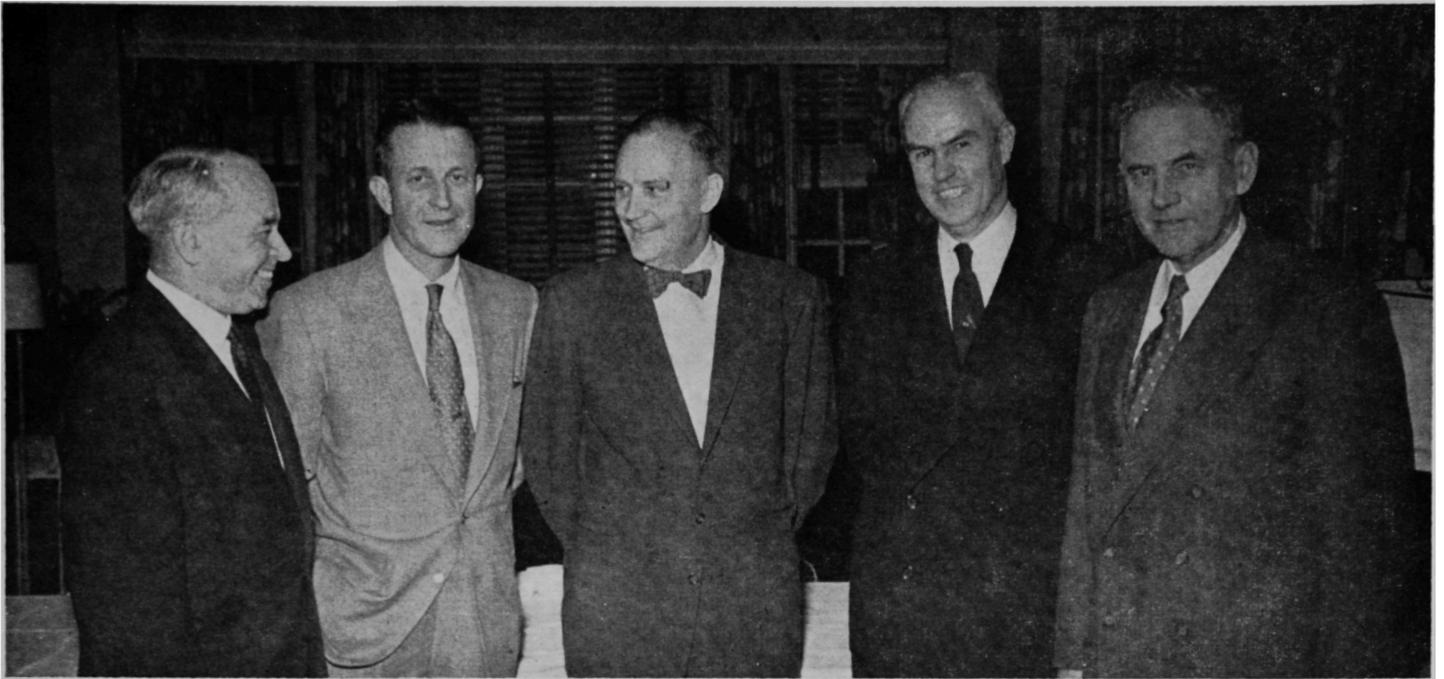

The present pattern of activities consists of providing prizes totaling fifty dollars in each of two of the three categories in the annual student personal library contest, co-sponsoring with the University Library a series of weekly book-related lectures during the winter and spring terms in the Browsing Room, and an annual dinner meeting with an address on a pertinent topic by a prominent speaker.

Several lines for further development are still open for exploration, however. Basically, it is most desirable that the size of the membership be increased, particularly among the alumni of the University, on at least two counts—greater financial support and a broadened base of interest in the primary reason for the Association's existence; namely, promotion of the welfare of the University Library.

A specific example of the way in which members throughout the state can serve is by scouting for materials dealing with the history and life of Oregon looking toward securing them for the University Library. Another area for development is that of sponsoring the publication, either of a journal or of a series of occasional papers, devoted to books and book related subjects and to serve as a medium of communication among the members of the Association.

The Association of Patrons and Friends of the University of Oregon Library has proved its merit during the eleven years of its existence. As it goes into its second decade we may look forward with confidence to continued proof of its value.

EXTENDING the first official alumni greetings to Dr. O. Meredith Wilson as forthcoming president of the University of Oregon, and to Mrs. Wilson, the Oregon Club of New York came out in a large gathering in New York City on December 3rd at the Barbizon Hotel.

As Dr. Wilson has been working in New York City with the Ford Foundation's Fund for the Advancement of Education, he had only a few blocks to go to meet a whole room full of Oregonians, before moving to the West Coast this spring.

Acting President of the University Dean Victor P. Morris was present at the dinner-meeting and expressed the university's buoyant confidence and expectation for the future in the choice of Dr. Wilson as its head.

In a few brief remarks, Dr. Wilson told alumni present he is looking forward to "becoming one of you."

ALSO highlighting the meeting was an informal advertising talk by one of New York's prominent Oregonians, Dr. Claude Robinson, '23 student body president, and now a partner in the famed Gallup-Robinson Research firm, and president of the Opinion Research Corporation.

Dr. Robinson, who says he represents a "group in revolt against stodgy, dull advertising," presented the readership ratings of a large group of national magazine advertisements and discussed their relative merits in their bid for success.

The meeting was presided over by President Leon Culbertson.

but Mary went into a small hospital for training straight out of high school, while Sally spent a bit more time and money and came out with a nursing diploma plus a bachelor of science degree from the University of Oregon.

In the nursing field, as in most others these days, a college degree is almost a prerequisite to advancement. To get to the really top administrative and teaching posts, graduate work is also advisable. If Mary decides, after working awhile, that she wants to obtain a college degree to help her advance, it will take her from two and one-half to three years more to bring her to Sally's educational level. With her three-year hospital training, that means it will take Mary from five and one-half to six years to get what Sally got in her combined college and nursing program of four calendar years.

THE University of Oregon school of nursing, located on the medical school campus in Portland, thinks its collegiate program is the best way. It has tried them both, but discontinued its straight diploma (noncollegiate) program with the class which entered in 1950. There was too much difference between the girls who entered straight from high school and those who had five to six terms of college to make the program well correlated.

How does this combination of college and nurse's training operate?

The girl who wants to become a nurse enrolls at an accredited college for a five-term pre-nursing program. Many girls take six terms, wishing to finish out their sophomore years on the college campus.

SALLY has just received her license as a registered nurse.

So has Mary. Both passed the same state board examinations, and both are looking forward to successful careers in a field that is crying for trained workers.

The much-publicized nursing shortage is no joke; the National Security Resources Board has estimated that a minimum of 404,500 registered nurses will be needed for civilian and military needs this year, and there are only about 350,000 now on active service. This is more nurses working than ever before, but demand is increasing faster than the supply.

Obviously neither Sally or Mary is going to have much trouble finding a job. But it's going to be much harder for Mary to get beyond the beginnings of the scale in the nursing profession. Not because she is less devoted to her work; not because she has personality problems or because, as the ads would have it, she doesn't use the right toothpaste.

The difference goes back to their training. Both have qualified as R.N.'s, it's true; ceive degrees in June, 1954, 32 took their pre-nursing work at the University in Eugene and 16 at Oregon State college. They'll be awarded their degrees by the college at which they took their pre-nursing.

The pre-nursing curriculum is designed to build an educational background broad enough to include work in English, history, social studies, literature and other liberal arts subjects as well as work in the biological and physical sciences.

After five terms, the pre-nursing student may come to the Portland campus in March; or she may wait to enter with the October class.

Her first two quarters in Portland, known as the pre-clinical terms, emphasize classroom instruction and orientation.

Then she receives her first clinical experience at Multnomah county hospital, a 310-bed institution which affords experience for medical students, nursing students and those enrolled in other medical programs. Here nurses learn about medical and surgical nursing, operating room technique, operation of the diet kitchen and obstetrical nursing. Rotating on medical and surgical floors of the hospital, student nurses help care for patients under the direction of doctors and graduate nurses. In the 13-week experience in the obstetrical department, the prospective nurse assists in the pre-natal clinic, cares for mothers and babies and helps teach mothers how to care for, feed and clothe their children.

Next comes another 13 weeks of service at the Oregon State Hospital in Salem and training in the care of the mentally ill. When the new $6,000,000 teaching hospital, with 31 beds for psychiatric patients, is completed some students will get this training in Portland. Returning to Portland, the student starts 13 weeks at Doernbecher Memorial Hospital for Children, also on the medical school campus, to learn about pediatrics.

For six weeks, the student nurse receives clinical instruction in the care of patients with tuberculosis at the University State Tuberculosis hospital. Besides learning to care for the patients, the student helps them work out plans for rehabilitation.

The other three weeks of the two years and nine months on the Portland campus are spent in the outpatient clinic, where more than 120,000 outpatient visits are recorded annually. These people come for treatment which does not require hospitalization.

There are three nurses' dormitories on the campus, and unmarried student nurses live in these. Contrary to some reports, married students are accepted for training; furthermore, they may marry at any point during their training, and even

“The Cisco Kid”

Checking the action of one of his display revolvers in his Mexico City firm is Rex Applegate '39, sporting goods wholesaler, author, close-combat expert and onetime bodyguard of the late President Franklin D. Roosevelt.

“SHOOTIN’ arms” are an old story to Rex Applegate '39, direct descendant of Jesse Applegate, famed pioneer of Oregon Trail and California '49er days.

His interest in firearms started at the early age of four and continued through his ROTC years at Oregon and on through World War II. Today, his firm in Mexico City is one of Mexico's leading suppliers of anything protective or athletic. Rex's exciting life is chronicled in an issue of his fraternity publication, The Magazine of Sigma Chi, by Jack Pearson.

When the war clouds appeared, Rex applied for and received active duty in the military police company of the famed Third Infantry Division at Fort Lewis, Wash. A year later, his request for a regular Army commission was granted and he was transferred to counter-intelligence in Washington, D. C. Later, he was attached to the famous cloak and dagger outfit, the OSS, under “Wild Bill” Donovan. From there he went into commando operations in Europe.

On his return to the United States, Rex was sent to Camp David, better known as President Franklin D. Roosevelt's summer retreat—Shangri La. He served as one of the personal bodyguards to the late president.

Later he returned to active duty with the military intelligence where he remained until his retirement in 1946 due to a service-incurred disability.

His military retirement was the beginning of a writing career. Recognized as an authority in the close-combat field, his articles appeared in The Infantry Journal, The Cavalry Journal, American Rifleman and many others.

REX'S book, “Kill or Get Killed,” the manual on survival in close-combat, is still a best seller in its field. In the second edition, completely revised, many new chapters have been added. Widely acclaimed, “Kill or Get Killed” is being used as a basic text for combat training in the United States forces as well as many foreign armies and police services. A Spanish translation is being prepared to answer the demand in Latin American countries. Unlike its predecessors, the book deals solely with the most effective methods of not coming out second best in close-up fighting, with or without weapons—not on parade-ground pomp and form or officer's club stratagems.

Rex's disability necessitated a move to a warm, dry climate and after considerable looking around, he decided upon Mexico City and his first job was parts and service manager for the Nash Motor Co.

After two years of this, he decided he would be happier if his first love—firearms—played the major role in his vocational activities. This resulted in his being appointed manufacturer's representative for a number of American arms firms.

In 1948, he established a new company with the famous Sanborn family of Mexico City and expanded operations to include a wide variety of sporting goods. “We also added lines of law enforcement equipment,” he revealed, “and sold bullet-proof vests (a fast-moving item), armored cars and other similar goods.” His experience in guns of all types and his police background fitted him well for arms sales in the Latin-American republic.

As a leader in the American colony in Mexico City, Rex plays host to large numbers of prominent visitors from the States. For those who want to fish and hunt, he serves as guide and fellow-sportsman. For duck hunters, Rex has his own private waterfowl preserve, only a 45-minute drive from his office. Indians, not dogs, are used to retrieve downed birds.

Rex's latest adventure is his interest in a firm which distributes Chris Craft boats in Mexico. He has a motor cruiser for his own use in Acapulco Bay waters.

Covetous eyes constantly peer in the direction of the Applegate gun collection, handsdown the finest south of the Rio Grande. Rex frequently receives offers for the huge collection of World War II firearms. Other collectors gaze longingly at rack after rack of weapons of all sorts—blackjacks to mortars and machine guns. But Rex will have none of it, his prize collection is not for sale, at any price.

Speaking of the rigors of Mexico City life, Rex confesses that after “struggling along with a bachelor establishment having only two maids, a cook and a houseboy,” he decided to quit “roughing it” and get married. Last July 31, the former Miss Adele Allen became his bride in a ceremony which easily ranked as a key summer event in Mexico City.

The Cisco Kid never had it so good!

Lumberman Makes B.L.M. Survey for Secretary McKay

by Evelyn Nill Ousterhout '51

A modest but forceful individual in Southern Oregon has spent the past 30 years doing his job in a style often referred to as "the American way." Soon after leaving the University in 1920, he started at the bottom in one of Medford's largest lumber concerns, and in six years became its president and manager.

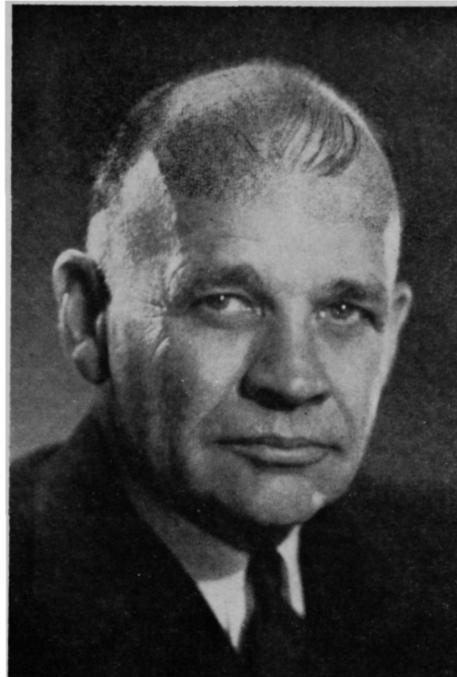

He is Floyd Hart '20, head of Timber Products company, who recently was named by the secretary of interior to a six-man survey team to study the Bureau of Land Management. His intense, sincere study of the department is typical of Hart's approach to any job he tackles.

The resulting report, turned in to Secretary Douglas McKay late in December, is expected to be made public shortly. The team spent over two months on this survey and traveled six times across the continent.

For six weeks they studied activities of the bureau in Washington, D.C., and then spent three weeks visiting field offices in the 11 western states before returning to the Capital to write the report.

Others on the team were Phil MacBride, Seattle attorney and past regent of the University of Washington; former Utah Lt.-Gov. Paul Hunt; and three Interior Department officials, Robert Efteland, Robert Coote, and Theodore Taylor.

LONG and fruitful service in Jackson county's largest industry justified Hart's recent appointment. He was born in Quincy, Ill., moving to Medford in 1908 where he attended county schools before going to the Harvard military school in Los Angeles and to the University of Oregon in 1916.

Service as a second lieutenant with the aviation section of the signal corps interrupted his college studies but he returned to the campus after two years with the army. He married Leah Walther, a University of Washington alumna, when he returned to Medford.

Starting as an office worker at Timber Products in 1923, Hart worked through the ranks. He arrived at the top in 1929 to manage a manufacturing operation employing 70 men and producing slightly over six million board feet a year. Today, under his direction, it has grown to employ over 300 workers and manufactures about 50 million board feet annually.

His productive career has been motivated by a belief that the community can reap the highest benefits from its manufacturers only when they provide maximum satisfactory employment and use its natural resources to bring the highest possible economic standards, both in the present and future.

A lieutenant colonel in the air force during the second world war, Hart was awarded the bronze star while executive officer of the 41st bomb group in action in the mid-Pacific.

He is a member of the Oregon state board of forestry and has been active in numerous groups working to conserve and utilize western forests. They include the new forest protection and conservation committee set up by the last state legislature to direct forest protection and research provided for by severance tax on all timber cut in Oregon.

Hart finds relaxation on his 43-acre farm where he helps manage a small Hereford herd. He and Leah have three children, Charity '44 (now Mrs. James Keeble); Harriett (Mrs. Jack Bergstrom); and Floyd, Jr., a staff sergeant in the air force. They also have four grandchildren.

Alumni Leaders Hold Annual Conference in Eugene

More than 60 alumni leaders from all parts of Oregon gathered for the sixth annual Alumni Leader's conference in Eugene on January 30.

The day-long meeting featured talks by members of the faculty and athletic staff, and alumni officers on topics covering various phases of University operations.

A morning session presided over by Association vice-president Ray E. Vester '21 brought to the rostrum Les Anderson '43, alumni secretary, who reviewed association activities of the past year; Dean Eldon L. Johnson of the liberal arts college who answered the question: "Why Liberal Arts?"; Charles R. Holloway, Jr. '35, alumni scholarship committee head, for a report on scholarship activities; and Bill Bowerman '33, assistant athletic director, who summarized the progress of the grant-in-aid program.

The luncheon speaker was Dr. John R. Richards, vice-chancellor and secretary to the State Board of higher education. His topic was, "The Place of a State University."

President George H. Corey '38 introduced the afternoon session leaders. Bill Berg '36, president of the Oregon Club of Eugene, heartily endorsed the University's present athletic policies in his talk, "The Alumni Look at Athletics." A panel of four student dormitory counselors presented an outline of the counseling program, followed by Dr. Ivan Niven, professor of mathematics, who described some of the many research projects now being undertaken. To give the leaders a basic understanding of basketball fundamentals, Bill Borchert '41, basketball coach, presented a blackboard talk showing basic patterns and formations used by the Webfoot quintet. Acting President Victor P. Morris '15 closed out the day's formal program with some concluding remarks.

Leaders and their wives were entertained at a reception at the Town Club of the Eugene Hotel, and were guests at the Oregon-Oregon State basketball game in the evening.

Direct Mail Noted

For the second year, the membership renewal letter series used by the Alumni Association has received special mention by one of the nation's foremost publications on direct mail advertising.

The letters were featured in an illustrated article which appeared in the January issue of The Reporter of Direct Mail Advertising. The "gadget-type" notices received two first place awards last year, one by the American Alumni Council and another by the Direct Mail Advertising Association.

That the State of Oregon will regain the Northern Division basketball title is anybody's safe guess. However, which of the state's two conference schools will wear the crown remains uncertain.

Slightly past the season's mid-point, Oregon and Oregon State are all alone on top of the division. They are tied with seven wins and three losses each. Nearest contender is Idaho with four wins against six defeats.

Oregon has dropped ND games to Idaho, Washington State, and Oregon State. Meanwhile, the Beavers—recently nicknamed Halbrook State College—have lost two to Idaho, plus one humiliation before a capacity crowd at McArthur Court.

It was this second game in a home and home series between the rival schools which developed a warm controversy in the state's press. The staid Portland Oregonian mentioned the contest in its editorial page. Comment ran from "public-be-damned basketball" to "brilliant Webfoot coaching."

The story, from this side:

Coach Bill Borchers' Ducks were humbled in their first Corvallis meeting with the tall men. Oregon game totals were the lowest recorded so far this season, and the squad was further nettled while reading about their loss in terms of an OSC coaching triumph. In short, according to newspaper accounts, the Ducks were forced to play basketball as defined by the OSC coaching bench.

This did not please the Oregon squad or their coach. The wrong end of 52-41 score was especially grating.

So they returned to the home floor determined to defeat strategy with strategy. The first quarter was "where the fans came in" on the previous night's feature. Gill's giants went into a tight zone defense, forcing Oregon sharpshooters to take chances with long shots.

The plot changed abruptly early in the second quarter. While fans remained spellbound, Webfoot Barney Holland held the ball on his knee. Estimates concerning the length of the impasse vary, but after several minutes the Beavers were forced from behind their tall "dam."

From that period it was a contest with both teams driving at both ends of the court. In fact, competition grew so intense that one Oregon score—perhaps the winning tally in a 42-40 final—may be credited to towering Wade Halbrook, the 7' 3" OSC pivot man. Halbrook and two Oregon players were after a rebound at Oregon's goal when the ball dropped through the hoop. Halbrook apparently scored for the Ducks,

Whatever the final analysis by sportswriters, two points remain certain: Oregon won, and 8,300 fans enjoyed an athletic contest which was refreshingly different.

Meanwhile, Oregon and Oregon State each have six games left which will decide the deadlock. Who has the strategic advantage? Based on game itinerary, the Beavers have an edge; Halbrook and company have three home and three away, while Oregon has one at home and five on the road.

Coach Borchers is counting on the accuracy of his top five to reduce this OSC advantage. Forward Ed Halberg rates between fifth and ninth in the nation on an all-season field goal percentage; Jerry Ross is developing rapidly and is quick on rebounds at the other forward; sophomore Max Anderson has scored 118 points in ND play at center. Rounding out the starting lineup is Ken Wegner, veteran guard.

Drama Reunion

The University Theatre will complete five years of successful production in their new theatre this spring and to celebrate the occasion, the theatre has scheduled a "Grand Reunion" for members, old and new, who have been active in University dramatics.

The event will be held Sunday, May 16, the last day of Junior Weekend. Attractions will include the meeting again of former classmates; sightseeing tours through the new University Theatre including the television studio; and for the main feature, a presentation of scenes and songs from past and present plays, starring the original casts.

As this is Mrs. Ottalie Seybolt's last year, she is anxious to meet old students and friends again before she retires.

Letters explaining the plans in detail have been mailed to over 1,000 former drama students. Anyone interested who did not receive a letter is asked to write to the University Theatre, University of Oregon, Eugene, Oregon.

Medical Scholarships

Two outstanding pre-medical students at the university have been awarded the Kenneth A. J. Mackenzie Memorial scholarships. They are Ronald Lowell of Klamath Falls and Christopher Williams of Medford.

Lowell, a graduate of Klamath Union High School, entered the university in 1950 under a $500 Standard Oil of California leadership scholarship which has been renewed each year. This fall, he was chosen as one of the Phi Beta Kappa "Senior Six."

A 1949 graduate of Medford High School, Williams is a member of Eta Sigma and of Pi Delta Phi, French honorary.

Ordinarily the scholarship goes to one student each year. Established in memory of the late Kenneth A. J. Mackenzie, former dean of the University's medical school, the scholarship is endowed through a bequest from the late Mrs. Mildred Anna Williams. The award is made during the student's last year of pre-medical study on the campus. He receives $200 for that year and $200 for each of the years he is in medical school, for a total of $1,000 if he continues to maintain high scholarship.

Sophomore Named

Dorothy Iler, sophomore journalism major, has been named the Pendleton East Oregonian scholarship winner in the journalism school.

Art Scholarships

Eighteen students in the school of architecture and allied arts have been awarded Ellen M. Pennell scholarships for one term tuition and fees at the university.

They are James M. Coleman and Gary L. Michael, both of Portland; Muriel Means Ames, Peter Cuthbert and Pat L. Slayter, all of Eugene; Kathleen Burgess, John Day; William Leabo, Milwaukie; Janet F. O'Neil, Coburg; Jane Slocum, Lebanon; Thomas E. Taylor, Roseburg; Helen D. May, Dayton; James C. Bowler, Hermosa Beach, Calif.; Charles E. Hawkes, Glendale, Calif.; Keith B. Keefer and Kenneth H. Keefer, both of Idaho Falls, Idaho; Norman Klehamer, Rochester, N. Y.; Bruce N. Thompson, Pasadena, Calif.; and Alfred A. Staples, Vancouver, B. C.

The scholarships are endowed through a bequest from Mrs. Ellen M. Pennell, for many years a member of the University library staff.

Dads Elect Officers

Gordon E. Wilson of Portland was elected president of the University of Oregon Dads at their recent annual meeting on the campus at which Governor Paul Patterson was guest speaker.

Elected to assist him were Hugh Biggs, Portland, vice president; and Horace Byler, Coos Bay, secretary.

Named to the executive committee were John Trolinger, Harry Norquist and Milton Rice, all of Portland; Robert Holmes, Astoria; Manning Barber, Eugene; Rudy Mollner, Prineville; William N. Dielschneider, The Dalles; Don Helliwell, Roseburg; and Dr. Vern Miller, Salem.

Hayward, McArthur

To Be Expanded

The State Board of Higher Education will open bids in March on plans to add seats to Hayward Field and McArthur Court. The building committee has approved plans to add 4,700 seats to Hayward Field and between 900 and 2,400 seats to McArthur Court.

Massive "house-moving" plans submitted by the architectural firm of Cooper and Rose for Hayward Field will lift a 300-foot-long grandstand 20 feet into the air to permit bleachers to be set in front of it. To seat 4,700 fans, the bleachers will extend over the east cinder track of Hayward Field and will be of the removable type so they can be taken out for track events. Some sections of the 28-year-old east grandstand will be reinforced so it will hold up under the lifting operation. The lower grandstand seats, damaged by 28 years of rain and wind, will be replaced.

Two balconies will be added to the west side of McArthur court providing 200 additional seats. The balconies will be suspended from the roof by a steel truss arrangement on top of the present building. Exit towers outside the building will be provided in both balconies.

Class of '54 Elects

The class of 1954 elected permanent class officers recently, naming Paul Lasker as president and Jean Mauro, secretary. Both are of Portland. The two will act as liaison personnel between members of the class and the alumni office in future years.

Awards that foretell your gain

Chemicals from coal hydrogenation...

...acclaimed the 1953 Chemical Engineering Achievement!

IN 1933 Carbide received the first Chemical Engineering Achievement Award. This recognized the beginning of commercial production of much-needed chemicals from petroleum and natural gas—which proved to be the beginning of the American petrochemical industry.

HISTORY REPEATS—Now, just twenty years later, Carbide has received the 1953 Chemical Engineering Achievement Award for “the first successful production of chemicals from coal by a high pressure hydrogenation process.”

In minutes, coal becomes gases and liquids rich in needed chemicals—“one of the major contributions in this century to the well-being of us all.”

Some of these chemicals are used in making plastics, synthetic rubber, pharmaceuticals, vitamins, and many other things. Others are completely new and hold great promise.

FOURTH RECOGNITION—Carbide is the first two-time individual recipient of this award. It also is the fourth time the people of Carbide have been recognized, for they shared in two previous group awards—in 1943 for synthetic rubber, and in 1946 for atomic energy.

TRUE SIGNIFICANCE—As in all Chemical Engineering Achievement Awards, coal hydrogenation was recognized not as the accomplishment of any one individual but as the result of the cooperative efforts of many.

The people of Union Carbide appreciate the recognition of their achievement by the distinguished Committee of Award, composed of senior chemical engineering educators.

Appointments Made

Two members have been added to the faculty of the school of journalism. They are Roy Adams, instructor in journalism, who will handle advertising classes, and Robert K. Tweedell, instructor in journalism.

Adams, an ex-Eugene advertising agent, took his master's degree at the university in 1953. He has had six years of experience in professional advertising including positions of advertising manager for an Illinois daily and for the Grants Pass Courier.

Tweedell, who received his bachelor's degree from the university in 1950, has been employed by the Denver Post since that time. He has been a reporter, night city editor, assistant Sunday editor and make-up editor on the Denver paper.

Dr. Richard C. Bernhard has been named to the staff of the economics department. He will teach during the winter and spring term leaves of Edwin C. Robbins who is working toward his doctorate at the University of California.

A graduate of Reed College, Dr. Bernhard holds a master of science degree from London School of Economics and a doctorate from Northwestern University. He has taught at the University of Illinois, Northwestern University, Wittenberg College, University of Utah, Nevada and Whittier College. From 1940 to 1943 he was associate economist in the Bureau of the Budget at Washington.

He is the author of "Economics," a book to be published in March by D.C. Heath and Co. of Boston.

Onthank Honored

Karl W. Onthank, associate director of student affairs and director of the graduate placement service, was elected secretary of the Western College Placement and Recruitment Association at the group's annual meeting held last month in Berkeley, Calif.

Onthank also recently was honored with a special plaque presented to him in commemoration of his more than 40 years with the university's YMCA.

Writes Prize Story

"Estates and Trespasses," by James B. Hall, associate professor of English at the university, is one of 22 stories in "Prize Stories 1954," 34th volume of the O. Henry Prize Stories. The book was published in January by Doubleday & Co., New York. Hall's story originally appeared in "Epoch."

Feb.-Mar. 1954

Ex-Oregonian Honored

Dr. Avard Fairbanks, dean of fine arts at the University of Utah and former professor of art at the University of Oregon, has been awarded the National Sculpture society's Herbert Adams medal of recognition.

The award was given for "distinguished service to American sculpture through inspirational teaching of the fundamentals of beauty, craftsmanship and integrity."

Dr. Fairbanks started his career as assistant professor of art at the University of Oregon in 1920. He has been closely identified with the state, particularly with its program to keep alive the stories and history of the Old Oregon Trail. He created the Old Oregon Trail medallion which has become the state's centennial emblem and the design of a postage stamp.

Besides teaching at Oregon, University of Michigan and Utah, he is known as an industrial designer, having been affiliated with Hudson Motors and the Chrysler corporation as well as the Ford Motor Co.

Travelers Return

Dr. Quirinus Breen, his wife and son Quentin, are at home in Eugene after spending a year in Italy where Dr. Breen studied on a Fulbright scholarship. He is a professor of history at the university.

Fred Cuthbert, professor of landscape architecture, has returned after a year's leave of absence spent under a Fulbright fellowship in New Zealand.

Cuthbert did research in New Zealand and Australia on town planning and landscape architecture and visited major architectural schools in Australia.

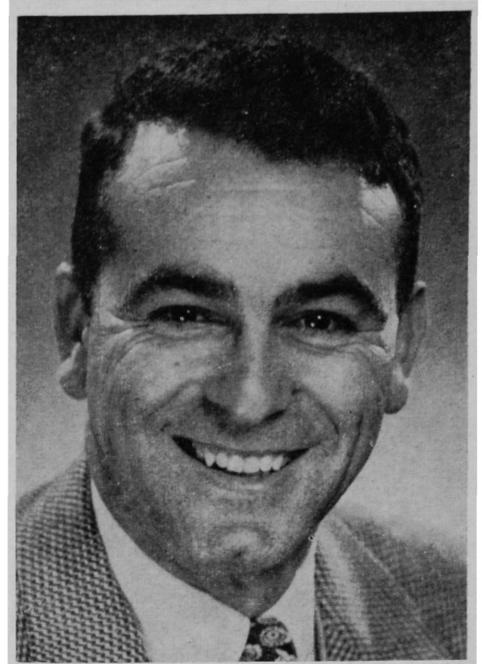

Receives Doctorate

Miss Jessie M. Smith, assistant professor of business administration, has completed her work for a doctor's degree in business education from Columbia university. She took her oral examinations at the university in New York after completing two and a half years of work at that school. She received her bachelor's degree from Oregon State College and her master's degree from the University of Oregon.

Miss Smith teaches classes in accounting, teacher education and stenography at the university.

Heads Theatre Group

Horace W. Robinson, associate professor of speech and director of the University Theatre, was elected president of the American Educational Theatre Association at a meeting held in New York. Robinson has been on the university faculty for 21 years.

Richard C. Williams '41, manager of the university's Erb Memorial Student Union, has announced his resignation, effective in August. Williams has worked steadily in the student activities field at the university since graduation except for war service with the U. S. Navy. He was a leader in raising funds for the building and has managed its affairs since before the opening in 1950. He is married to the former Marjorie Jane Kellogg '42. They have four sons and one daughter.

Royalties Received

Dean and Mrs. Sidney W. Little have received their second royalty check for their "The Four-Language Phrase Book," published in September by the David McKay Co.

Dean Little, of the school of architecture and allied arts, and his wife conceived the idea for the book when they were in Italy two years ago. They compiled some 2,000 phrases in English, French, Spanish and Italian, to enable the traveler to convey his wants more easily. A small book, about the size of a passport, it sells for $1.50.

They are planning a second book to include German, Portuguese and Swedish phrases.

Grant Received

The University of Oregon medical school has received a $25,000 training grant award from the U. S. public health service for the department of ophthalmology. The grant, to be administered by Kenneth C. Swan, professor and head of the department, will run from July 1, 1954, to June 30, 1955.

The award was made on the recommendation of the advisory committee for neurological diseases and blindness of the National Institutes of Health.

1919 Hoop Team Holds Reunion

It was back in 1919 that an Oregon basketball team won the Northern Division championship and went on to defeat the University of California in a playoff to bring the University its first Pacific Coast conference championship. Unlike the well-manned teams of today, this squad was composed of six men, five first stringers and a "spare."

Those same six men returned to the campus on the week-end of January 23 to celebrate their 35th anniversary reunion and watch the 1954 Oregon quintet sweep a home series from the University of Washington.

This was strictly a "home-grown" team. All of the players graduated from Oregon high schools, and since graduation from the University, have made their homes in Oregon where they have led successful business and professional careers.

On the night of the final game with Washington, the team was formally presented to the 7,800 fans who jammed McArthur Court. Captain Ned Fowler, now a physician in Astoria, led his team on the floor. He was followed by Dr. Eddie Durno of Medford, also a physician; Herman Lind, an investment broker in Portland; T. I. "Nish" Chapman, co-owner of Koke-Chapman company of Eugene; Francis Jacobberger, a Portland architect; and Carter Brandon, staff manager of the Portland chamber of commerce.

Only person missing was their coach, Dean H. Walker of Independence who died in late December of last year. As a final tribute to their departed coach, the team, joined by the entire McArthur court crowd, stood for a moment's silence.

All members of the quintet agreed that basketball had changed a lot in 35 years. Target of much criticism was the dominating role which the referee's whistle plays in most modern-day contests. On the other hand, several admitted the game is much faster even to the point it could stand some slowing down by bringing back the center jump.

Regardless of recent rule changes and the new styles of play, this team will be long remembered by University of Oregon followers as true champions. Even in 1919, the basketball still had to go through the hoop to score points, of which this team scored plenty.

President To Speak At Portland Meeting

Saturday, April 3 will be the date for the sixth annual Portland Alumni Institute, according to a recent announcement by R. Robert Smith '40, Portland association president.

The annual program features talks by prominent faculty members on topics of current interest in an afternoon institute session. A banquet follows in the evening.

The University's new president, Dr. O. Meredith Wilson, will be this year's evening speaker. The occasion will mark his first public appearance in Portland.

The institute chairman and faculty speakers will be announced at a later date, according to Smith. All alumni in the Portland area will receive complete program information by mail. Those from other cities who are interested in the program should watch for announcements in the Portland newspapers.

Last year's program was staged under the chairmanship of Harold Cake '18 with Vivien Kellems '18, nationally known woman industrialist from Connecticut as the banquet speaker.

The "Bells Will Toll" Chimes Ordered For Student Union

Oregon students soon will hear chimes pealing across the ivy-covered campus.

A set of electronic bells will be installed on the Erb Memorial student union building this spring, possibly in time to greet President O. Meredith Wilson when he arrives about March 15.

The 25-bell set will cost $3,500 and funds for the purchase came from gifts of the classes of 1943 and 1953. However, $800 was lacking.

At the Alumni Leader's conference held January 30 on the campus, Dean Sidney W. Little of the school of architecture and allied arts explained that $2700 had been collected but $800 more was needed. He requested the fifty-odd leaders to urge people in their areas to make contributions.

They never did. Before the day was over, the alumni leaders themselves pledged a total of $850, more than enough to order the chimes. It was one of the most spontaneous demonstrations of alumni support yet noted.

The chimes, broadcast over four amplifiers, will be used between classes and for special events such as the graduation procession in June.

Field Man Named

Stewart F. McCollom '51 has been appointed membership field representative for the Oregon Alumni Association. Purpose of the newly-created position is to contact alumni personally in order to obtain additional memberships in the Association.

McCollom is a graduate of the class of 1951. He obtained a master's degree from Boston university in 1952, and until recently was employed by the Oregon State Medical society. He will make his headquarters in Portland.

Scholarship Program

Expansion plans for the University of Oregon Alumni Scholarship Program are being carried through under the direction of Charles R. Holloway, Jr. '35, Alumni Scholarship Chairman.

Bob Thomas '35, Deschutes County director, has announced plans to initiate the second annual Community Scholarship campaign in Bend soon. It is hoped that sufficient funds will be raised to provide scholarships for five Bend High School graduates this spring of $300 each. The four Bend award winners last year had grades well above the freshman class average at the end of fall term.

Arthur N. Muller '34, Wasco County director, is heading the Community Scholarship committee in The Dalles. That drive will begin soon with at least three tuition scholarships for worthy students from The Dalles as their goal.

Other communities which plan to provide Community Scholarships are Eugene, Pendleton, Hillsboro, Hood River, Grants Pass, Albany, Astoria, Oregon City, and Klamath Falls. Plans are under way to have the committees organized and a community fund started for each of these cities before the end of 1954.

Inter-Fraternity Board

A seven-man Alumni Inter-Fraternity Advisory board has been appointed by the executive committee of the Alumni Association to act as a liaison body between the University's office of student affairs and the 21 campus Greek letter fraternities. The committee announced the appointments at its January 30 meeting.

A. T. "Ted" Goodwin '47, Eugene attorney who served as chairman of the special alumni committee to study the deferred living plan last year, will also serve as chairman of the new group.

Others on the board include Lou Torgeson '42, William Robert '39, Paul Lansdowne '47, Kurt Olsen '49, Ray Hawk '47, and Milo Marlatt '33. All are presently serving in an advisory capacity to local chapters of national fraternities, and are residents of Eugene.

One of the first topics of business for the new board will be to study the financial condition of campus fraternities, and recommend steps to aid those groups which show evidence of being in poor financial condition.

The University administration has already indicated its willingness to permit freshmen residents of Eugene to live in the houses. Previously such students could live only at home or in a dormitory. It is also anticipated that some freshmen dormitory residents will be permitted to move into fraternities if they are members of organizations whose lack of men presents a serious financial problem.

Alumni Secretaries Meet

More than thirty professional alumni workers representing 22 institutions in the Pacific Northwest gathered in Eugene on February 1 and 2 for the annual district conference of the American Alumni Council.

A number of group sessions featured panel discussions on fund-raising, alumni organization, magazine publishing, direct mail techniques and other phases of alumni association activity.

One of the main speakers was Howard H. Overback '38, a partner in the Portland direct mail firm of Taylor and company, who discussed the topic, "Making Direct Mail Work For You." He also led a two-hour direct mail clinic.

Other speakers included Seward W. Marsh, alumni secretary of Bowdoin college in Brunswick, Maine, who is president of the American Alumni Council, the national association of alumni secretaries representing more than 600 colleges. He was accompanied by Ernest T. Stewart, Jr., executive secretary of the Council which has its office headquarters in Washington, D. C.

With the University of Oregon acting as host, Les Anderson '43 alumni director, and Herbert N. Nill '52, assistant, served as conference chairmen. James M. Lyle, Jr., University of Idaho, is chairman of the district serving this region.

Officers Nominated

Nomination for officers for the year 1954-55 were made at the sixth annual Alumni Leader's conference in February. Ray E.

Vester '21 and Orval N. Thompson '35 were named as candidates for the offices of president and vice-president.

Vester, who majored in economics as an undergraduate, has engaged in the banking business most of his life, serving financial institutions in Portland and in the state of Washington. Since 1941, he has been president of the Mutual Loan company in Portland.

He served as chairman for the Portland alumni institute in 1952, and was a member of the first special committee appointed that year to study the deferred living plan. For the past year he has been a member of the executive committee and vice-president of the Association.

The vice-presidential candidate spent six years on the Oregon campus, obtaining his doctor of jurisprudence degree from the law school in 1937. Thompson also attended Northwestern university where he received his master of laws degree. He is also a member of Phi Delta Phi, legal fraternity, and Phi Beta Kappa. Except for a tour of duty as a naval officer in World War II, he has practiced law in Albany as a member of the firm of Weatherford and Thompson since 1939.

Serving on the nominating committee were William Harrow '40, Morris H. Rotenberg '34, and Howard Page '31.

In accordance with Article VIII, Section 2 of the Association constitution, "Additional nominations may be made by any member of this Association who shall have submitted to the president a nominating petition signed by not less than ten members of this Association, said petition to be filed with the secretary not later than May 15 of each year." Election ballots will be mailed with the June issue of Old Oregon, with the new officers assuming their duties July 1.

The camera caught various expressions at the Alumni Association's executive committee meeting January 30 in Eugene. Seated clockwise around the table are Victor P. Morris, acting university president; A. T. Goodwin, Ray Hawk, Dean Gordon Sabine, Morris H. Rotenberg, Mervin Vater, George H. Corey, alumni president; Les Anderson, director; Willis Warren, Ray E. Vester, Randall S. Jones, William Harrow and James W. Hubbard. Not shown but present were Charles R. Holloway and Herbert N. Nill, assistant alumni director. Dr. Morris, Goodwin, Hawk and Vater were guests at this particular session which discussed various phases of the "living in" program.

Report from India

Dr. Hugh B. Wood, professor of education at the University of Oregon, is in the Far East on a Fulbright grant to participate in a special teacher education program in India. With him are his wife, Helen, and daughter, Pam. Following are some interesting excerpts from his "Wood-O-Grams."

OUR first view of Japan was startling. Beautiful, deep green mountains loomed up, then neatly laid-out farms and attractive villages (attractive from the air, at least). A sleek, streamlined, electric train rolled along. As we moved towards Tokyo, however, this beauty gave way to smog, devastation, industrialized areas, slums, and the usual filth of a large city. Customs were simple; baggage was not opened.

Our taxi ride (so called) from the airport to the Imperial Hotel where we stayed, was something! We took off like a jet plane, behind a maniac driver (all Tokyo taxi drivers are maniacs!) driving up a narrow street on the wrong side (left hand side, European style) at not less than 50 m.p.h. amidst (1) thousands of men, women, and children dashing hither and yon, appearing from nowhere, disappearing to the same place, and (2) literally thousands of bicycles, 3-wheeled truck-framed motorcycles, other taxis and cars, carts and other vehicles, horn blowing all the way. I'm sincere when I say that the street for the first three miles was no more than 18-20 feet wide between buildings (no sidewalks) and there averaged no less than 1000 people per average city block and 100 vehicles! As we approached the downtown area, streets widened and there were sidewalks, but traffic increased. I haven't figured the ratio yet, but neither have the taxi drivers! They are precision drivers, however, for although we passed thousands of persons and vehicles at 40-50 m.p.h. without a hair to spare, we didn't see a single accident. We heard it said that if a car had two coats of paint they could take off one coat without scratching the undercoat.

We left Tokyo for Calcutta via Hong Kong, Bangkok and Rangoon. We immediately fell in love with Hong Kong and soon learned we did not allow enough time for stop-overs at Hong Kong, Bangkok and Rangoon. Hong Kong is calm, beautiful, picturesque, quaint, and clean. Driving is sane; shopping provides some of the best bargains in the world. It is known as the city with the ladder streets.

IT WAS raining when we reached Bangkok. Many a traveller is just making the discovery that there is no place on earth quite like Siam. This quaint and pleasant little kingdom is filled with mystic beauty and tradition, ancient bejewelled temples and palaces. Picturesque canals interlace the city and it is known by many as "Venice of the East." In Bangkok alone there are hundreds of temples with fantastic lacy spires and roofs of glittering tile. The temples are a combined place of worship, town-hall, recreation center, school, and refuge for the aged. Along the narrow streets the three-wheeled bicycle cabs have the right-of-way. The garb here was mostly western as it was in Hong Kong and Tokyo. The girls wore their hair bobbed, the ends curled in permanent waves. We understand that the garb in the villages is the "pan-ung", a sarong-like garment of cotton that drapes from waist to knees. To prospective travellers, Hong Kong and Bangkok are a must.

We found Calcutta to be a very friendly city. On Sunday we were invited to the first of many teas and dinners given by both the Americans of the Consulate, and by Indians that we met. After the tea, we were invited to a children's party given every Sunday evening by an old bachelor who heads the American Export Lines.

I spent most of my time visiting schools and colleges and conferring with educational officials. Helen sometimes went along, sometimes window-shopped, sometimes had "tea." Once, I took Pam and Helen to a high school entertainment of some dancing, some recitations, and some music celebrating the coming of the rains. It was quite impressive. After the performance was over all of the girls practically mobbed Pam. All Indians have coal black hair and eyes; Pam's blue eyes and golden hair were too much for them. They pinched her cheeks until they were black and blue.

Calcutta geographically is much like Portland. It is divided by the Hooghly River, a delta branch of the Ganges, and is crossed by a single bridge carrying 1,000,000 persons daily. The city covers an area approximately ten miles long and six wide. However, the population approximates 5,000,000.

Half of Calcutta's millions live in low one-story hovels or shacks built adjacent to each other in long rows. Two or three families may live together in a single room 8' by 10'. There is no furniture, but part of the floor may be raised 18" to provide sleeping space. Most of these huts are open on the front side with only a sheet to pull across the opening at night.

It is estimated that not less than half a million people live on the streets and sidewalks of Calcutta. This means literally that they are conceived there, born there, raised there, and die there. At night they curl up on a gunny sack on the sidewalk, preferably under a portico extending across the sidewalk, or an awning. A few of the more fortunate drag rope beds out of hiding. In the winter months it may go down to 55 but they stick it out. For some reason, they avoid the parks, and residential areas, even in the summer time. They seem to prefer the busiest sections of town. One night we counted over 200 asleep in one block in front of the Metro Cinema, but there are thousands per block down in the banking district. The railroad station is always packed with them. Each person has "squat-ter's rights" to his spot and generally returns to it each night. Eventually we found ourselves walking over and around these people with no more concern than the natives.

Calcutta, like other cities, has some customs that to the foreigner seem quite strange. Perhaps the most unique to the American is the free range given to cattle and other livestock. Believing in reincarnation, the Hindu, of course, will not molest an animal or an insect. The cow is particularly sacred, but moreover these free-roaming cattle provide the chief source of milk. (There is one dairy in the city.) Therefore the cattle and goats roam through the city, sometimes with a herdsman, more often without. Some of the cows are "owned," others are common property to be milked on a "first come" basis. Bulls seem to belong to no one.

Perhaps the most difficult thing for the uninitiated to believe will be the commonness with which these critters are to be found down town in the busiest traffic on the street or sidewalk. They are always there. One evening we saw a herd of 50 just standing and lying in the busiest intersection in Calcutta during the five-o'clock traffic. We have seen 20 streetcars lined up waiting for one cow to finish her nap on the tracks. Cars constantly have to meander around them. They lie down in the entrances to banks and stores, and people walk around them completely indifferent to their presence.

The streets are kept reasonably clean because cow dung is prized by the poor as fuel. They collect it immediately and with their hands pat it into little waffle-like cakes which are stuck against the walls of their houses to dry. When dry, they burn the dung in "charcoal" burners to cook their meals and provide warmth in the winter time.

Another bit of street life for which Calcutta is noted is professional begging. There are perhaps 1000-2000 who ply their trade on the busier streets and in front of tourist hotels. They are nearly always deformed in some way, many deliberately. Pity turns to disgust when one learns the truth about these people. They live in one section of the city and are trucked in daily to their respective working areas. We were warned not to give them anything or they would sound a signal and scores would descend upon us. Many Indians want them removed from the streets; the vast majority are indifferent to them.

At Delhi, we stayed with a Methodist missionary, Miss Ella L. Perry, who runs the Butler Memorial Girls' School, and has been in India for 20 years. This was like dropping in at home—a bit of America in India. The missionaries have nice modern living quarters and "know the ropes." We ate good American food. We found the same conditions at the other missions where we visited or stayed all night. Incidentally, we found these the most satisfactory places to stay when we could get in. They are always expecting guests and usually have room for them. Another thing; the several denominations have "blocked off" various parts of India and do not compete with each other. For example, only the Catholics are here in Patua; they have some fine schools and an excellent hospital; they are wonderful people. The missionaries have made wonderful contributions to education and medicine in India.

Student Nurses

maternity leaves are granted.

A picturesque sight on the medical school campus is the white bib and apron and charcoal-gray uniform of the student nurse. For her first six months, she wears this uniform without a cap; then she wears a plain cap for another six months. For the next year she proudly displays a gray-striped cap, and for the last nine-months her cap bears a black stripe.

In addition to the bachelor's degree program, the school of nursing offers graduate study leading to advanced degrees in general nursing, public health nursing, and teaching and supervision.

In Oregon, graduate nurses start at a salary of $245 a month. But for the college graduate going up the ladder, there are positions in hospitals, the public health service, the armed services, in schools of nursing, industry, offices, schools and in private duty for salaries approaching the $20,000-a-year mark.

Sally's glad she took her nursing training through a collegiate program like that of the University of Oregon. Besides paving the way for a successful career, it's given her all the intangible advantages of a college background. If she marries, she has had excellent preparation for homemaking, and has the satisfaction of knowing that her nursing training plus her college degree will give her a passport to useful employment whenever she needs it.

Necrology

State Senator Dean H. Walker, a leader in the Oregon Legislature for 20 years, died in a Salem hospital Dec. 24 of a heart attack.

Born at Rickreall Sept. 9, 1889, Walker was graduated from the University of Oregon in 1913. He later earned a master's degree from Columbia University.

Walker remained at Oregon as graduate manager until 1913 and then headed the physical education department for four years. He also was dean of men for three years.

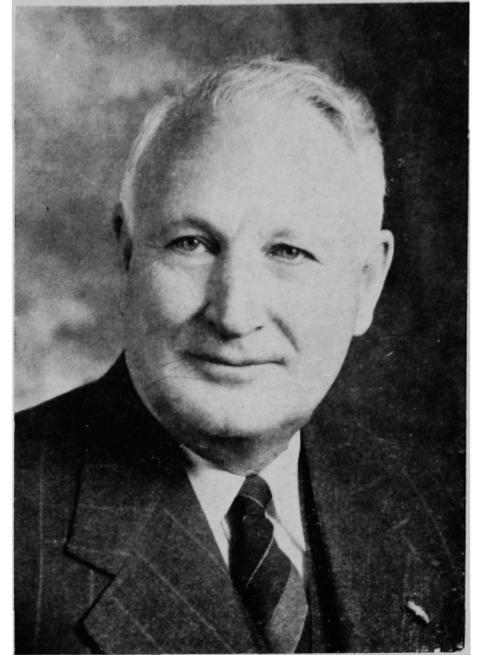

As head of the physical education department, Walker coached the Oregon basketball team to one title, and helped coach the football team that beat Pennsylvania in the Rose Bowl.

Upon receiving news of Walker's death, Charles D. Byrne, chancellor of the state system of higher education, said, "Senator Walker began his outstanding record of service to education as dean of men and athletic coach at the University of Oregon. Later, as dean of the state Senate, he earned the respectful title, 'Mr. Education,' awarded by those of us who worked with him. He was truly one of the finest public servants in Oregon history."

Walker was the Legislature's outstanding authority on taxation, budget and education matters. He served as chairman of the ways and means, taxation and education committees, and usually wrote the legislature's tax bills.

He was president of the Senate in 1941 and served several times as acting governor during the next two years.

Republican Party leaders urged him many times to run for governor or U. S. senator but Walker never was interested in higher office.

Dean H. Walker '13

His outstanding piece of legislative work was the "Walker Plan," formula under which state income tax rates were reduced during the war years.

In the 1953 session, Walker was chairman of the Senate Ways and Means committee, vice chairman of the Tax committee, and a member of the Education and Rules committee. For many years, he was on the State Emergency Board, a legislative committee which makes appropriations when the Legislature is not in session.

When in Eugene, Walker was a member of the city council and was in the furniture business. He served in the field artillery in World War I and had operated a large hop ranch at Independence. He was president of the Oregon Hop Growers and at one time was a member of the United States Hop Control Board.
