“As a Matter of Fact . . .”

In an across-the-desk conversation with an alumnus in Salem recently we were asked a not-too-familiar question. “I’ve been a member of the alumni association ever since graduating,” he related, “I’m a donor to the grant-in-aid fund. I’ve attended almost every homecoming. I attend every alumni meeting here in Salem, and even come through with a cash donation to a scholarship fund now and then.”

He went on, “But I still wonder sometimes if there isn’t something else I could be doing.” Wishing that every alumnus could claim such an enviable record of assistance to his alma mater, rather hesitatingly we replied, “Well, as a matter of fact, there is!”

Like a football team without good material, a university without an intelligent, active, and resourceful student body is forever doomed to mediocrity. Thus the University of Oregon is constantly in need of and is searching for outstanding high school graduates to fill its student ranks.

Perhaps we should enlarge on that term, “outstanding.” Too often these days it appears as though colleges are interested in attracting only those who can perform for their varsity athletic teams to the extent of offering varying types of encouragement. Certainly outstanding athletes are desirable, but so are valedictorians, student body presidents, high school editors, honor students, girl’s league presidents and the like.

Each year about this time those students are beginning to think of the days ahead—where they will go to college. By and large the decision is not an easy one unless they are certain of the occupation or vocation they will follow.

Here is where all alumni can be of assistance. If a student definitely shows an aptitude for college training, and if he is interested in the courses of study that the University of Oregon offers, no one can do a better job of selling that student on its advantages than a University of Oregon alumnus.

It is impossible for the University to represent itself before every individual prospective student. But with alumni scattered to the far corners of the State and nation, they can assume the role of field agents constantly on the watch for talented young people who will do credit to their alma mater. That is one way every alumnus, regardless of his resources, can be of help.

YE SHALL KNOW
THE TRUTH

TOWARD academic achievement

By Bob Ford

The OLD OREGON here begins a series of articles on developments in schools and departments through the seventy-five years of the University's growth.

Speech

SPEECH is the youngest of the University's formally organized departments. Although it has a long history of development in the form of various subsidiaries of the English department, it achieved full departmental status only in 1946.

In 1946 the instructional areas of drama, public speaking, radio broadcasting, and speech correction, together with the curricular and extracurricular "laboratories" of theatre, forensics, symposiums, radio broadcasting and the speech clinic, were declared one major department. It now offers both the bachelor's and master's degrees.

In 1947 plans for a specialized building for the department were formulated, with the result that remodelled Villard Hall and its new theatre wing now accommodate in one physical unit what a leading New York drama critic has termed "The finest educational facility of its kind in the nation."

The University Theatre has produced 316 plays for a total of 822 performances since 1900, and now operates on three experimental-type stages in addition to its main stage and modern auditorium.

In 1912 the first instructor in drama was employed; in 1913 was organized the League for the Study of Drama; in 1915 Guild Theatre in Johnson Hall was completed. With a seating capacity of 180, a miniature stage, and no shop for scenic construction, it served as the University's theatre until 1949.

During the early thirties the emphasis was shifted from intramural and inter-school competition in traditional debate to highly realistic discussion-type experiences with audiences throughout the state. This latter development stands not only as a distinctive change in educational philosophy and organized speech activity in the University, but also as an innovation which has achieved nation-wide favorable notice.

Radio broadcasting from the University campus began almost with the beginning of radio in the early twenties, and included occasional national network presentations. The first regularly scheduled broadcasts of any sort began in 1929 over station KORE, though not until 1937 did radio instruction enter the curriculum. From modern studios atop Villard Hall the University's educational FM station is now on the air six hours each day during the school year, and regular broadcasts are scheduled for KOAC and Familiar scene to winter term students is the University library, located at the south end of the rain-swept quadrangle on new campus.

COMMON in the speech of the students at the University of Oregon is the word "pigger," defined generally as "a boy who dates girls," and who thereby engages in the common extracurricular activity called pigging. Specifically, a pigger is a male student who escorts a co-ed to an athletic contest, traditionally a "no-date" affair.

Such violation of the proprieties is frowned upon, and custom requires that the offending couple be greeted upon its arrival by the cry of "Pigger!" shouted in unison by the other students in an attempt to bring shame, remorse, and future reformation to the offenders. The custom continues, though the result in recent years has been mainly collective hoarseness.

Long before the cry developed, the word was known, together with the legend explaining its origin. Writing the chapter letter to his national fraternity's magazine, a student in 1901 said, "Speaking of 'piggers,' we have more than our share of them. Every man in the chapter, the reporter alone excepted, is a first class pigger."

But the term had unpleasant connotations and associations, and though it had currency it lacked respectability so that in 1909 an unofficial student paper, the Midnight Doughnut, carried on a long discussion of its use and merits, noting that the "Word is Vulgar, Coarse and an Insult to Co-eds, say Scores of Students."

One student held that the term originated at Oregon Agricultural College and was therefore beyond the pale, and others called for some newer, nicer, nater word to take its place. In 1900 it was claimed that the word "pig," meaning a girl, with its allied forms "pigging" and "pigger," had had some popularity at the University of California but had failed to supplant the terms "queen" and "queening" among the Berkeley students. Oregon Agricultural College students were content with "fusser" and "fussing," as they still are.

On February 2, 1924, the Daily Emerald published a story headed, "Pigger's Retreat is Disturbed by Heartless Police," and lamented that "the cemetery is no longer safe for couples strolling goallessly in the moonlight." Shortly thereafter, the Emerald recanted, the editorial board banned the use of the word in the columns of the paper, and the new dean of women, Virginia Judy Esterly, swarmed into the fray to extirpate the uncouth term and to locate a more suitable replacement.

The Emerald offered a cash prize for the student who could produce a nice new word and gave "fussing" and "queening" as suitable examples. Visitors to the campus, said the student paper, had found "pigging" and after considerable publicity was given the contest, the award went to Shelby Carter, a junior in business administration, who took his cash and let the credit go, leaving "juner" as his contribution to student lingo. And with that, "juner" made its lone appearance in the Oregon Daily Emer- ald, giving gentility and poesy a Pyrrhic victory.

In spite of the attack on "pigger" and its evidently recognized etymology, it flourished and sent forth a new sprout during the early 1920's. Sometime after 1921 but before 1926—the word became a cry, used at athletic contests, shouted at attending couples. When a pair of students arrived at a game, the rooting section chanted derisively, "Pigger-r-r-r!" as the section still does when a couple is spotted, although the custom is fading today.

The number of married students attending the University after World War II complicated the custom; husbands and wives vigorously resented the cry when directed in the later versions. Told during the campaign of 1909 against the term, the story went this way:

"I was a student at the time . . . and was staying in the dormitory. Among the students rooming there was one fellow who had a sweetheart living on a farm two or three miles out in the country. With other barnyard stock, this girl's father kept a lot of pigs.

"The student was a pretty ardent wooer, and at least twice a week he used to spruce up and hie himself out to the country. Finally it got to be something of a stock saying among the fellows that he was going out to see his pigs. And before long it narrowed down into, 'he was going out to their way. Today the cry is sometimes heard shouted from fraternity houses at passing couples, but in that use it has hardly become a tradition.

By the coming of the 1930's the word was firmly established as a part of the student vocabulary and was used as a cry at athletic events. By the end of the decade, "pigger" had become respectable enough so that the Student directory, long known as the "pigger's guide," officially accepted the name and in the issue for 1938-1939 used Pigger's Guide as a subtitle. In the 1946-47 issue the name moved to the front cover, to disappear for a year, only to reappear as the official title of the publication of the eminently useful and frequently consulted list of students' names and addresses—and phone numbers.

How the word came to the campus always interested students who quickly provided a series of stories and legends to explain its real or imaginary, or whether, if real, they preceded or followed the introduction of the word itself, is not clear. However, one tale was sufficiently plausible to be accepted and firmly believed as a factual account of a specific event. The story is still told in varying degrees of faith by undergraduates and alumni, despite claims of rival tales.

Its first appearance in the form that became the common story was in 1909, written by a recent graduate, and it contained most of the basic elements or motifs found see his pig.' After that 'pigger' and 'pigging' followed naturally, of course."

This may be compared for the development and difference in motifs to the present "standard" version published in each issue since 1945 of the Pigger's Guide . . .

Once, when Villard was a sturdy thing,
And campus enrollment quite small,
Something happened, scheduled to bring
The fairest tradition of all.
A freshman lad, so shy and demure,
Had a girl friends just out of town,
And if they found out, our hero was sure
That the upper classmen would frown.
So on Saturday nights, when the sun was low,
He put aside Spanish and Trig,
And told his fellows he had to go
To call on his prize winning pig.
His father, it seemed, had a little farm
Just out in the country a ways . . .
He thought no one could see any harm
In his agricultural craze.
But some of his buddies quickly got wise,
And leaving the house he turned white,
For down through the halls rang their jeering cries,
"Hey, Homer! Going pigging tonight?"
The term was born, the idea was great,
It became a tradition, you see,
And soon was applied to all those who date,
And that's how the "pigger" came to be.

THE AUTHOR, Randall Mills, was an assistant professor of English in the University until his sudden death in late January. This article is reprinted from a paper written by Mr. Mills for the October, 1951 issue of Western Folklore, published at the University of California at Berkeley. He was an authority on folklore and Western American transportation, and the author of two books on that subject.

Between the 1909 version and the Pig-ger's Guide version are wide differences, particularly in motivation, though essential elements remain the same: a student, calling on a girl, uses as an excuse to his fellows an alleged desire to visit some pigs on a farm, and the derived term is applied to him in derision when his ruse is discovered. Today student versions also follow the essential outline as given in the Guide.

Among student versions today, to the bare outline have been added numberless variations in detail in an attempt to make the story more plausible, more within the range of experience of the student group. That is, what is supposed to have happened in the past is explained by reference to conditions of the present, conditions familiar to the students on their daily activities. That the event actually took place is accepted by perhaps a majority of the narrators who take pains to reproduce details as they have heard them, altering them only when those details are not consonant with the teller's own college experience. In the current versions, those details within the range of ordinary experience tend to be made exact; those beyond ordinary activity of a student today are left general.

The date of the event usually remains vague. Graduates before 1900 adamantly insist that no such affair or word existed in their time. "It is my impression," wrote a member of the class of 1900, "that people in the Gay Nineties were rugged individualists, they didn't twaddle about pigging, they hogged it." Another, of the class of 1896, maintained that the term was clearly too undignified to have been current in his undergraduate days. Later alumni seem to agree on a period between 1899 and 1903 as the time of the event, the latter date agreeing with the version written by George Hug. Students today, who are not too aware of historical perspective, say that the event took place "around 1915," or 1922, or "about 1926-35," or "in the early part of the Thirties." Frequently they say only that it happened "a long time ago," or "when the University was young," or "twenty or thirty years ago."

Where the student of the story lived and why he resorted to subterfuge are problems within the range of today's undergraduate experience. Alumni identify the student as having lived "in the dormitory, Friendly Hall," but to the students today the detail is implausible: to them, Friendly Hall is a classroom building. In the poetic version, reference is made to Villard Hall, another classroom building, but in some student versions, Villard Hall becomes the setting. An old building, the second erected on the campus, Villard Hall slipped easily into the story, although today the identification is no longer made by students in telling the story.

With the opening of very large dormitories and the introduction of fraternities, informal group activities changed, so that the student today finds it more reasonable to believe that the event took place in a fraternity house where the social group is small and integrated. Further, in fraternities many elaborate rules governing social activities of freshmen can be expected. The student in a fraternity house quite plausibly might have resorted to some excuse to cover his clandestine dating; he might have been bashful and avoiding group raillery, and again he might have been breaking a house rule.

Students, telling the story about the boy and his pigs, are forced to explain what to them would require no explanation. Why he of the story had to use an excuse to see his girl presents today something of a problem. "Many years ago," one student began her version of the story, "a strange phenomenon walked the lanes of our campus; this, contrary to the ordinary human being, was an honestly shy college boy." Usually the student in the story becomes a freshman, and a shy one at that, and hence unusual but apt to involve himself in complications. In a few versions the boy is not shy—quite the contrary—but is forced into evasion by university or fraternity rules or, in a couple of tellings, by attempts to avoid competition.

The girl whom he courts needs explanation, though she is never clearly identified. Sometimes she is said to be a fellow student, often shy and demure (if the version in which she appears also has the shy freshman), and often she is said to live on a farm, located variously as being outside of town, a few miles a way, in a neighboring town "just west of Eugene," a few miles away, in Springfield, near College Crest, or on South Willamette Street. The last two locations are most frequent in stories given by alumni; Dean James Gilbert of the class of 1903 definitely locates the farm of the girl on South Willamette Street, about two miles from the university, and supplies circumstantial evidence to support his identification so that his version is both plausible and possible. Indeed, so circumstantial is his version that it is impossible to deny that the story has basis in fact. The placing of the farm at a town "west of Eugene" is in a version by a freshman uncertain about local geography, there being no town so located that can be reached easily; the use of Springfield as a setting probably stems from the usual college ridicule heaped upon a smaller neighboring community and at the same time probably stems from the story of the car-line. The farm is usually placed within walking distance from the campus, though in a few stories it is located as far as fifty miles from the university.

How pigs become involved poses something of a problem to the university students. Many dismiss them casually by saying the excuse was a simple lie based upon local conditions that existed in the past. Sometimes the student in the story comes from a near-by farm (his uncle's or his father's), sometimes the girl is identified

Bill Borchers leaves coaching career at Marshfield high to take over as Oregon's new basketball coach

He Holds Basketball Hopes

By Bill Gurney

Bill Borchers, familiar to sports followers of the 1941 Duck basketball team as a varsity forward, returned to his Alma Mater last October to take over the reigns from John Warren, former head basketball coach who resigned to enter business.

Borchers, who played on an unheralded Oregon team that finished third in the Northern Division in 1941, learned his basketball fundamentals from Howard Dobson, who had coached the Ducks to the national collegiate title three years before. He came to the Oregon position from Marshfield high school where he compiled an outstanding win-loss record in his six years there.

Borchers this year inherits the remainder of the squad that copped second place in the Northern Division race in '51, a team that thus far in the season shows steady improvement and efficient ball handling. The success of his debut year at Oregon is still an open question at this writing.

The story of the man who now holds the hopes of Oregon basketball fans is a curious one. He always liked basketball above all else, but at times was considering journalism as a career, led a Dixieland dance band and once was almost induced to enter Oregon State and concentrate on football.

He was born in 1919 in Minnesota but moved to Everett, Washington, while still in grade school. It was in the eighth grade that he played his first game of basketball on an organized basis.

Always husky, he was early tabbed as both a football and basketball prospect.

Remaining at Everett high his first two years he played on good teams in both sports and saw action in the state basketball tournament.

North Bend, the chief rival of the Marshfield Pirates and only a stone's throw down the highway, was the next stop for Borchers in his prep career. He continued doing well both on the gridiron and on the maple court in high school, then headed for Sacramento junior college for higher education.

Here a leaning toward journalism cropped out and Borchers became sports editor of the school newspaper. "I liked journalism very much," he said, "but I liked sports more, and when they promoted me managing editor I resigned when I found out I had to give up writing about them."

"Sometime I'll write the great American novel," he said, but admitted he never seems to find time to get started.

At Sacramento Borchers was marked, ironically enough, as a top football prospect and only a fair basketball player. If it had not been for the persuasive manner of Howard Hobson he might have entered the football picture at OSC. As it was, he came to the University in the fall of 1939 and never left the campus.

During his first varsity season, he was a reserve, although he made the 11-man team for the eastern barnstorming trip. In 1941 he was unheralded at the start of the season, but his aggressive play won him a starting forward berth in the first conference game. His forte was rebound work and he excelled as a feeder to Hank Anderson, high scoring forward.

"It makes me mad, too," he said with a grin, "because in a basketball book written by Hobson I read that my shooting average was higher than Hank's."

Top: Varsity basketball players receive instruction from Bill Borchers in a time-out huddle on the sidelines. Bottom: Close-up of Oregon's new head man in basketball.

He and Anderson, who is now basketball coach at Gonzaga university in Spokane, are among the few coaches who are as tall as their players. The bespectacled Borchers, complete with crew cut, dresses just like his players in practice and gives them personal demonstrations of proper technique on the court.

Before closing out his athletic career at Oregon, Borchers picked up a letter as an end on Tex Oliver's 1941 football team. He graduated that fall and went into the navy.

He says that although Howard Hobson really taught him the fundamentals of the hoop game, it was in the navy that he learned to put them into practice. He launched himself into the coaching field on an informal basis at the Jacksonville (Fla.) Naval air station and his own play netted him a position on the all-southern team in tournament competition.

The Pioneer of University Journalism

Throughout his 32 years at Oregon Dean Eric Allen was considered a great teacher and a constant student

By Lorna Larson

HE WAS a great teacher . . . and a constant student. He was an energetic administrator . . . and a true friend. These were the comments of those persons acquainted with Eric W. Allen during his 32 years at the University of Oregon as dean of the department, and then the school, of journalism.

When the dean came to Oregon he did not step into another man's place as head of an established department. In those days of 1912, journalism schools were not the common part of academic institutions that they are today. There were very few in the whole United States.

It was President Prince L. Campbell's call that took Dean Allen from a secure staff position on the Seattle Post Intelligencer to the then unique task of building a journalism school.

Eric Allen's life story from 1912 to his death in 1944 becomes one of the growth and development of a nationally recognized training school for young journalists. In 1912 the journalism offices and classrooms were consolidated in one small room in the basement of McClure hall. There was no journalism building, no printing plant, and only a handful of students.

When he died, still in the midst of his work as dean, he left behind an enrollment which exceeded 300 prior to World War II, a journalism building and a University press.

The basic press equipment was given him by Harrison R. Kincaid, old-time publisher of the Oregon State Journal in Eugene. Among the equipment was the old Washington handpress which printed the first newspaper west of the Missouri, The Oregon Spectator. The press still stands in the journalism building. With this equipment as a basis, and with the able assistance of Robert C. Hall, who came in 1917, the dean built the press into one of the best-equipped small printing plants in the West.

Dean Allen was an efficient, practical man, and consequently used the University press for a two-fold purpose. Aside from handling the printing chores of the University, it served as a laboratory in printing and publishing for journalism students. He believed in giving students the best available facilities and instruction. For several years John Henry Nash, noted American printer, was visiting lecturer in the school of journalism.

Dean Allen was a man of varied experience in editorial, business, and mechanical departments. He had tremendous enthusiasm for his work, and a gift for teaching. A wealth of non-journalistic knowledge was evident in the dean's conversation and lectures, and he thought his students should likewise acquire more than practical professional knowledge. He made a policy of limiting a student's journalism courses to 25 per cent of his academic load. The result was that Oregon journalism graduates had backgrounds in a wide selection of liberal arts courses.

And they needed this general knowledge for his famous course in editing—a five-hour class for seniors. New seniors were said to quake in contemplation of this class, in which the dean applied general cultural knowledge to present day problems. He set a high standard for seniors, and though the course was anticipated as an ordeal, students later looked back on the course as one of the school's most valuable.

His classes were not dull. "His curiosity to know why—and how—injects a rare vitality into his classroom talks," commented Marjorie Major Goodwin '45 after his death. "His eyes always lighted up when he detected that one of us had done original thinking. He tolerated no second-rate mouthing of half-truths and made sure that they did not slip by unchallenged."

Dean Allen's unusual energy and accomplishment are reflected in his early journalistic career before coming to the University. In 1904 he went to Seattle. He wanted a job on the over-staffed Post-Intelligencer. The paper's city editor, bothered by so many applicants, had devised a means of discouraging aspiring reporters. He sent them to interview a Greek Catholic priest who didn't want to be interviewed. Usually, reporters failed and went away. But Allen was an exception. He had acquired a knowledge of Greek during his days at the University of Wisconsin. A few compliments, some fast talking and he had the interview . . . and a job. The same ambition and initiative carried the dean through life.

From reporter he worked his way up to Northwest news editor and assistant managing editor before he left for Oregon. One year of his eight in Seattle was spent as manager of the Seattle Engraving company.

With him until her death in 1943 was his poet-writer wife, Sally Elliott Allen. He met her when she was a senior in philosophy at the University of Wisconsin. Before they married, he spent some time studying law in the Milwaukee law school, did some reporting for a Milwaukee paper, and served as teacher and principal of the La Junta, Colorado, high school. They had four children.

Upon coming to the University Dean Allen's activities were not limited to University problems and development. He left an imprint on Oregon journalism. In few states do weekly and daily papers work in such harmony as that prompted by the dean's Oregon Newspaper Publishers Association, one of his favorite projects.

In recognition of this interest in the state's papers his name was, in 1940, placed on the Amos E. Voorhies plaque as the man who had done the most for Oregon journalism's development in that year.

Nationally, he was prominent. He served two terms as president of the American Association of Schools and Departments of Journalism; a term as president of the American Association of Teachers of Journalism, an organization which he helped to establish. In 1925 he was made honorary president of Sigma Delta Chi, national professional journalism fraternity. His articles appeared frequently in the Journalism Quarterly and other professional and general magazines. He was the author of "Printing for the Journalist."

From his birth on April 4, 1879 in Appleton, Wisconsin, to his death on March 5, 1944 in Eugene, Eric Allen made a permanent place for himself in the private halls of fame of innumerable journalists, students, and friends. And the memory which the University holds of the dean is that of one of Oregon's truly great educators.

... "Station KWAX"

THESE are the first words to be spoken over radio station KWAX, Eugene, Oregon. . . . These words of Dick Hardie, KWAX station manager, opened the initial broadcast over the University's new radio station in April of last year.

This broadcast marked the realization of a thirty-year dream to have a campus radio station broadcasting regularly to a University audience. Today the "Voice of the Oregon Ducks" goes over the air 36 hours each week with a varied schedule of educational and feature broadcasts to the campus area.

The long struggle for establishment of a campus station dates back to 1922 when a few experimental broadcasts were aired over a "high-power transmitting set" owned by a University student. Later in the 1920's attempts to establish such a station proved futile because of lack of funds. Broadcasts were heard only intermittently from the University until 1938, when KOAC, state-owned radio station in Corvallis, installed remote lines to the campus. Three years later broadcasting studios were built in the old extension building on University avenue. This arrangement allowed several hours of programming from the University each week—a practice which still continues. Although KWAX supplies a local outlet, KOAC broadcasts some of the University's programs over the state.

Not until 1949 did University radio receive real major encouragement. That year modern studios were completed on the third floor of Villard hall and a small campus station, KDUK, made a brief appearance. After this attempt, constant efforts were made in the direction of establishing a permanent campus station.

Although technical difficulties prevented extended operation of KDUK, the temporary station served as impetus for Kappa Rho Omicron, radio honorary, to sponsor a fund-raising drive for a campus station. By persuading students to donate their breakage fees, the organization raised enough money to purchase necessary equipment for the actual station.

In the fall of 1950 the "gas-pipe" type of broadcasting already in use was abandoned and applications were made to the Federal Communications Commission for construction and licensing of a 10-watt FM non-commercial education station. This application followed approval of the project by University administration and the State Board of Higher Education.

From the time that equipment was ordered in November after FCC approval until the station finally reached the air in April of 1951, construction was continually delayed by scarcity of materials, construction modifications, and an inopportune railroad strike. Equipment tests in March were followed by the first program test in April, when the Voice of the Ducks first came over the air. The actual license for the station was granted May 1, 1951.

With a wide variety of broadcasts, KWAX progresses toward its two-fold objective of providing a realistic environment for application of classroom theory, and offering a regular schedule of educational and entertainment features to FM listeners.

Operating at 88.1 megacycles on the FM radio dial, KWAX is on the air each weekday from 5 to 11 p.m. and Sunday from 3 to 7 p.m. Programming is designed to reach special interest listening groups among students, faculty, and general campus community residents. It is organized to supplement radio fare already offered in the campus area while presenting a foundation of practical knowledge for interested University students.

Five-storied Carson hall for women (right), not yet three years old, shows striking contrast to the prefabricated units of the Veterans dormitories where most freshmen men are housed.

Backgrounds in University Building

By Bill Frye

The OLD OREGON concludes a series on the stories behind names of University buildings. This month: the history of Oregon's five dormitories.

OF THE five dormitories at the University, two were named after prominent deans, one carries the distinction of being the only campus building named in honor of a living person and one was dedicated to 10 former students. Hendricks' hall, a women's dorm, is named for a Eugene merchant.

It was T. G. Hendricks, a grocery store owner, who provided for part of the funds that paid for the building of Deady hall and soon after enabled the University to open. Townspeople in 1875 who were struggling to raise money for the recently approved state institution, donated what they could—potatoes, boxes of apples, and in some instances pigs and calves. Hendricks was always able to convert the goods into needed cash.

The dormitory named for him was completed in 1914 to take care of the increased number of women on the campus who found crowded conditions in the old Mary Spiller hall. The new building housed 56 and was provided as a gift by the state.

It was not until the years following World War I that an increase in enrollment again caused the University to feel the pains of its growth.

Representative Homer D. Angel '00 was president of the Alumni association and together with President P. L. Campbell they began a systematic campaign to raise funds in 1920. The result was subsequent legislation which provided funds for the immediate construction of three buildings, among them a new dormitory for women.

The new dorm was completed in 1921 to accommodate 112. It was dedicated in April of that year and later was given the name Susan Campbell, after the wife of the University's president.

Oregon's popular dean of men, John Straub, who gave more than 50 years of service to the University before his death in 1932, has the only permanent men's dorm named for him. The structure houses 272 students within its six halls.

Five of the halls have Greek letter designations. The sixth, Sherry Ross, is named for the father of Mrs. Mary J. Woodward whose $75,000 land gift furnished part of the funds for building the dorm. The remainder of the money came from the sale of bonds, and a portion of the earnings were pledged for the annual payments. Total cost was $350,000.

Contractors broke ground for the building in the spring of 1928. It was ready for occupancy the following autumn, freeing historic Friendly hall for educational purposes.

Like Straub hall, the largest women's dorm was named after a prominent dean. Luella Clay Carson came to the University in 1888 when she was elected to the chair of English composition and elocution. In 1895 she was made dean of women.

The building that bears her name was dedicated Feb. 11, 1950. Cost of the five-story building was $1,600,000.

Miss Carson is remembered for her admonitions on morals and manners and it is doubtful if she would approve her namesake, which is fully equipped with small parlors to give dating couples some seclusion.

During the time Miss Carson was dean, students were permitted to mingle socially at only one event—the Walkaround. Later, at the express orders of the dean, a boy might not walk in company with a girl unless the pair maintained six feet of space between them.

Miss Carson had a strict upbringing that shaped her future thinking. Born in Portland, she was trained at the old Portland academy and St. Helens hall. Before coming to Oregon she taught at Pacific university in Forest Grove.

Ten alumni who lost their lives in World War II have dormitory halls named in their honor. The two units known as Veterans' dorm each contain five halls. A common dining hall was provided between the two units and used from the time the buildings were completed in 1945 until last January.

Verdi D. Sederstrom '40, who was killed in the initial attack on Pearl Harbor, was first of the ten, to whom a hall was dedicated. The others were Robert Cernerney '42, Wyman French '44, Maurice Hunter '41, John A. McChesney '42, Francis Minturn '44, Paul Merrick '44, Francis Nestor '40, Stanley Ray '45, and Louis Stitzer '41.

The two frame buildings, which can house 752 men, were moved to the campus from industrial centers in the Pacific Northwest at the close of the war.

AN ALUMNI COMMITTEE STUDIES DEFERRED LIVING AT OREGON, MAKES RECOMMENDATIONS

toward BETTER living PLANS

Compiled by the Alumni Committee of

Charles R. Holloway, Jr.

*Vice-President
Oregon Alumni Association*

THE DEFERRED living program, since its initiation a year and a half ago, has been a major concern of students, faculty and alumni of the University.

More than three years have passed since the announcement of the plan to have freshmen live outside fraternities and sororities was made to the students. After a year of adjustment by fraternal organizations, the plan went into effect and was accompanied by continuing opposition and gradual acceptance.

In 1950 a special committee was appointed by Herbert J. Darby, then president of the Oregon Alumni Association, to study the progress of the deferred living program on the campus. During last fall term the committee interviewed students, faculty, and the administration, collecting data on the University's general response to the plan.

The committee, headed by Charles R. Holloway, vice-president of the Association, submitted its report to the president of Oregon Alumni at the annual Alumni Leaders conference on the campus February 16.

Members of the committee are Holloway, Mrs. Melba Hess '25, C. Earl Walter '49, Ray E. Vester '21, Ivan McKinney '23, Rev. Wesley G. Nicholson, Henry Fowler '14, Omar C. Palmer '32, and J. Wesley Sullivan '43.

Following is the entire report of the committee as presented at the leader's conference.

1. The deferred living program at the University of Oregon is based on a sound educational foundation.

2. It is your committee's belief that the University administration failed to make available to the entire student body as well as the alumni complete information regarding the policies and plans which they had for instituting deferred living.

3. This committee continues to disapprove the methods by which the deferred living plan was invoked at the University of Oregon and it believes that the administration has failed to properly inform students and alumni of the benefits of the plan. This committee recommends that a restatement of policy regarding the plan's institution as well as progress report on its operation be sent to each campus living organization, to the national headquarters of each Greek organization on campus, to all organized Greek alumni groups and that copies be made available to other individuals or organizations desiring them. We feel that such a restatement and report would do much to dispel the confusion, secrecy, rumor, and misinformation that now surround the plan.

4. One measurable improvement in the program has been the grouping of all freshmen together so that orientation to University living is being accomplished more effectively.

5. The counselling program which this committee finds to be both the justification for and the success of deferred living, has improved, but much remains to be done in securing qualified counsellors in sufficient numbers. This committee finds that the program has been severely retarded because the administration has been unable to provide competent counsellors. This lack should receive immediate attention if the program is to be successful and acceptable.

6. This committee finds that Greek living organizations have suffered financially during the plan's operation. It recommends that the problems confronting these organizations, financial as well as social, be a matter of grave concern to the University administration and that the administration accept an active share of the burden of adjustment.

7. This committee strongly recommends that a deferred pledging policy be instituted at the University to implement the present deferred living plan. Our principal reasons for this recommendation are as follows:

a. There is considerable unrest in the minds of undergraduates and alumni due to confusion which exists at the present time. In order to achieve a uniformity of activity and eliminate the confusion, a stable, definite pledging program should be developed.

b. This committee believes that the present program creates a divided loyalty between the dormitory and the Greek organization which interferes with the purpose of the plan and interrupts the pre-planning and day to day functions of the Greek living organizations.

c. It has been definitely proven at many of the nation's colleges, both large and small, that when deferred living and deferred pledging are instigated together, the program runs smoothly and efficiently for all concerned.

d. The undergraduate who pledges and continues to live in the dormitory assumes an additional financial burden which we believe to be inequitable.

This committee further recommends that sorority and fraternity pledging be deferred until spring term so that the administration, alumni, undergraduates and prospective students will know their status for the ensuing year.

The pledging practices under this recommended plan should be developed in cooperative effort by administration, Greek living organizations and alumni so that the result will be the formulation of a satisfactory and realistic pledging program to all concerned.

8. This committee recommends that the alumni president appoint a committee similar to this one to continue study and observation of deferred living with particular emphasis on the status of Greek living organizations and the overall effect of the plan in accomplishing the four objectives outlined at its introduction."

This report will be presented at the next general meeting of the Oregon Alumni association for approval or disapproval.

Toward Achievement

Eugene's commercial stations. The State Board of Higher Education recently notified the FCC of its intent to utilize an educational television channel in Eugene.

Courses for the training of special workers in speech correction, together with the operation of a demonstration-service clinic available to children and adults throughout the state for diagnosis and treatment, had their beginning in the late nineteen-thirties. As of 1952 the University is truly Oregon's center for training speech correctionists and for counselling the speech handicapped.

Over the years the University's speech work has moved from shallow elocution and extra-curricular dramatics to a sound and complete educational program in all phases of speech instruction and research.

Mathematics

The University has included mathematics in its curriculum since the opening of the University in 1876. The first University faculty had three members, one of them being Mark Bailey whose duties included the teaching of mathematics. The first faculty member hired specifically as a professor of mathematics was J. D. Fetcher who came to the campus in 1895.

The mathematics department offers standard undergraduate courses which serve as preparation for advanced work in mathematics and other sciences, and service courses designed for students in such fields as business.

The department offers upper division and graduate work in mathematics and statistics. Courses in applied mathematics are offered to meet the needs of advanced students in physics and chemistry. Consideration is given to the fact that the statistics courses are chosen by many students with major interest in such fields as economics, psychology, sociology, education, and business.

Since 1945 the departmental offerings at the graduate level have been greatly increased. For the first time in the history of the department the Ph.D. degree in mathematics was awarded in June, 1951. Five candidates earned this degree. The Atomic Energy Commission has recognized the high calibre of the graduate work by awarding two successive Atomic Energy Fellowships to students working for the Ph.D. degree.

The department has sent forth students who now hold positions as high school teachers, university professors, research mathematicians in government or industry, statisticians, actuaries, as well as many who are now in business occupations.

Anthropology

The department of anthropology was established July, 1936, under the chairmanship of L. S. Cressman, who was also the only full time staff member. In 1938, Dr. Homer G. Barnett was added to the staff as a full time member. The staff now consists of four full time members, one research associate, and three graduate assistants. In November, 1951, the department was authorized by the Graduate Council to offer the Ph.D. degree.

Research programs have been developed in the archaeology of Oregon and especially in the field of Early Man studies. These research programs have aided in the understanding of the prehistory of the state, at least to the extent of detailed information on certain parts and outlining the problems in certain other areas.

Four years of work in the Klamath area has yielded information of the prehistory of that area with the occupation having been continuous from more than 7000 years ago. An archaeological program intended to work out the prehistory of the Oregon Coast is now under way.

In the Aleutian Islands Dr. Laughlin has been carrying out a wide program of research aimed at discovering the prehistory of that area and the present conditions of the culture and people. Studies of blood grouping, dentition, and cardiac conditions of the Aleutian Island population will be included in this study.

Studies are also being carried out in the areas of contact between the Indians and the Whites to throw light on the processes involved in the contact between different racial groups, and with the idea that information so gained will help in the formulation and carrying out of public policy.

Do You REMEMBER WHEN?

1920. A black "buggy paint" was used by some vandal to deface the senior bench. The letters "O.A.C." were smeared on the back of the bench, and decorations of a similar nature were painted on the seat.

1920. The question of an honor system at Oregon was discussed by President Campbell, who came to the conclusion that Oregon will try the honor system—that much was certain. An editorial in the Emerald explained that students should realize the responsibility of the adoption.

1920. The Oregon Omega Chapter of Delta Zeta, national women's fraternity, was installed on the Oregon campus.

1920. A big campaign booth was placed in front of the library, to aid in the drive to reach 1000 subscriptions which would make the publication of the first issue of "Lemon Punch" possible.

1920. Three sophomores were brought before the Student Advisory Committee for cutting down two trees from a tract of land east of Eugene for the sophomore dance.

1921. An editorial in the Emerald stated that Oregon Hall and the new School of Commerce buildings are "queer looking." The editorial went on to say that the music building and the new home of the School of Education and the University high school are set too far to the south, and should be closer to "the center of things."

1921. One of the highlights of the freshman dance in the Armory was a "cleverly executed" balloon dance given by Verna Shute of Hendricks Hall.

1921. The new edition of the OLD OREGON was a special issue devoted to the student memorial for the men who were killed in action during the war.

1921. A letter signed "Selah" was sent to the registrar, saying that "The end of the world will come on Jan. 28, following a half an hour of peace in Heaven."

1921. The new Fenton Memorial Library, given to the University by Mr. and Mrs. William David Fenton in memory of their son, Kenneth Lucas, was formally presented at the regular assembly meeting in Villard Hall.

1921. There were 2004 students on the campus, with the BA school leading with 425.

1921. Approximately 600 men were registered for gymnasium work. This was a new high for Oregon. The chief aim of the instructor "is to make the gym work as recreative and as pleasant as possible."

1921. Two women hikers from Columbia University hiked out to Oregon to become "enthusiastic admirers of the Oregon campus."

1922. "Shall Junior Weekend be abolished or shall it be subject to the rulings of a limitation of expenses . . ." was a big issue in the Emerald. Most students agreed that Junior Weekend activities are "too strenuous and that too much time and expense is required."

1922. Two freshmen from Hendricks Hall went swimming in the Millrace with two inches of snow on the ground. "It was great," one of them was heard to exclaim. "I'd do it again tomorrow!"

1922. Representatives of the faculty, who were behind the plan to institute the holding of Saturday classes on the campus, were invited to a special meeting of the student council to discuss the matter.

The Telephone Tempest

A proposal by the Pacific Telephone & Telegraph company to install an intra-campus phone system was unanimously rejected at a January meeting of the ASUO Senate and students decided to press the six-months old pay telephone controversy in an attempt to get their old free-phone system back.

The tempest over telephones began fall term when returning students found that pay phones had been installed in all living organizations. Reaction followed on an unorganized scale and the dispute finally centered around the interpretation by the Pacific Telephone & Telegraph company that living organizations are semi-public.

A meeting between a group of students and Public Utilities Commission officials in Salem regarding the ruling failed to settle differences. PT&T offered to take out the pay phones and install free ones on a campus hookup, but students held out on the basis that this wouldn't permit calls off campus.

The controversy cooled down for awhile, but flamed anew when rates went up January 21 to 10 cents a call. The Oregon Daily Emerald began a campaign in its news and editorial columns. The ASUO Senate gave new life to the phone committee, instructing it to use all possible means to reach a settlement and bring free phones back. Students themselves got riled up and drew attention by a snowball rally that ended when 250 of them gathered on a street corner, built a bonfire and took up the cry, "We want free phones," and "A dime's a crime."

Even the University administration got into the fracas. Dean of Administration William C. Jones, in appearing before the ASUO Senate, said "The administration of the University feels that an appeal of the tariff should be made before the PUC." He said he felt that the telephone company "doesn't know how precarious this tariff is. I don't see how it could be binding on fraternities and sororities."

He suggested that the semi-public ruling be contested from the fraternity and sorority point of view. If the private organizations win their case, he said, then the administration would move to see that the dormitory case was pleaded.

Dads Invade Campus

University of Oregon Dads observed their 25th annual meeting on the campus February 2 and 3 when about 600 of them gathered for the traditional Dads' Weekend.

The weekend was climaxed with a luncheon Saturday in the ballroom of the Student Union where fathers were welcomed by this year's hostess, Mrs. La Nelle Gay Newman, and heard an address by Dr. Charles D. Byrne, chancellor of the state system of higher education.

Following the luncheon there was a business meeting of the Oregon Dads club in the Dads' lounge of the Student union where new officers were elected. Arthur Priaulx, Portland public relations man, was elected president of the state organization. Gordon Wilson, Portland, was elected vice-president and Manning Barber, secretary. Priaulx took over his position from Owen Bentley, who had been president for the past two years.

The dads elected the following to their board of directors for two-year terms: Forrest Byer, Coos Bay; George McIntyre, Klamath Falls; Vern Miller, Salem; Lawrence McCormick, Medford; and Richard Jones, Portland. Frank Shaw, Coos Bay, was elected for a one-year term.

Speaking to a luncheon crowd of 750, Chancellor Byrne predicted that enrollment in the state's institutions of higher learning would be doubled by the early 1960s. Dr. Byrne said he felt the 1951-52 enrollment was a "post-war low." The state's high schools, he said, will graduate 1500 more seniors this June than in June 1950.

Phi Beta Kappa Elects

Six senior students received academic honors this fall when they became the "Senior Six" of Phi Beta Kappa, national scholastic honorary.

Those named for membership by the honorary were Gerald Berreman, anthropology; Jackie Pritzen and Catherine Black, English; Anita Holmes and Gretchen Grondahl, journalism; and Virginia Wright, sociology.

The six students were initiated in Gerlinger Hall on the 175th anniversary of the honorary.

Becomes Rhodes Scholar

Alexander Riasanovsky, University graduate, has received a Rhodes Scholarship for two years of study at Oxford University, England.

Riasanovsky is a Phi Beta Kappa of the class of 1951, with a major in philosophy. He received his pre-college schooling in Eugene and is a graduate of University High School.

The scholarship winner will specialize in modern politics, economics, and philosophy at Oxford. His brother, Nicholas, now a professor of history at the State University of Iowa, spent three years at Oxford on a Rhodes Scholarship.

Men Hold Winter Rush

About 135 men participated in rush week this year, held the second week of winter term, as compared to nearly twice that number who went through last year, according to figures from the office of student affairs. Of the 134 signed up for the official four-day rush period, 120 were pledged.

Alpha Tau Omega and Phi Delta Theta each pledged 17. Four of the 21 fraternities did not pledge men. Last year, with rush week held during fall term, 193 were pledged.

Director of Men's Affairs Ray Hawk attributed the decrease in rushees to two reasons: One was that many freshmen this year did not want to face the prospect of rush week with all the chaos, strain and disappointment that come with it. The other, he said, was financial. Men going through rush week pay a fee of $10, but the fee for open rushing is only $5.

One other factor may have had a bearing on the comparatively small number who rushed this year: Where rushing last year was open to all freshmen men during the fall-term period, this year it was restricted to those who made the required 2.00 GPA. Hawk said that of the 500 frosh men, two-thirds made their grades, leaving about 165 ineligible. About 200 eligible men did not go out for rush week.

Three fraternities were handed down fines totaling $135 by the Inter-fraternity council for violating the IFC's hands-off policy, in force up until rush week started. In two cases, the fines were levied where fraternities had mailed out letters and Christmas cards to prospective rushees. The other case involved fraternity men who entered freshman dormitories.

The hands-off policy went back into effect after rush week for the freshman men not pledged and continued until open rushing began Jan. 28. Unlike last year, pledges now are permitted to visit their fraternities as often as they like. They were not permitted to compete on a fraternity athletic team, however, until the fifth week of winter term.

THE FACULTY

Lecture-Forum Series

The schedule for the lecture-forum series for winter term, sponsored by the Association of Patrons and Friends of the University of Oregon Library has been completed.

Faculty speakers included in the lecture-forum series are Dr. D. S. Willis, assistant professor of Oriental languages; Dr. Gordon Wright, acting head of the history department; Dr. Carlisle Moore, associate professor of English; E. G. Moll, professor of English; and Dr. E. C. A. Lesch, professor of English.

Dr. B. A. Minto, Islamic scholar from Pakistan, and Michael Flach, visiting lecturer in political science, are also included in the series.

Faculty Gains Position

Several members of the University faculty have recently been elected to offices in various scholarly and professional organizations, many of them national.

Theodore Kratt, dean of the School of Music, recently was elected president of the National Association of Music Executives of State Universities, and has declared that the 1952 conference will be held on the Oregon campus.

Dean Kratt is also vice-president of the

Turnbull Takes Post

George Turnbull, emeritus professor and dean of the School of Journalism at the University until his retirement in 1948, recently joined the staff of the Albany Democrat-Herald. He will have the title of associate editor.

One of the best known persons among newspaper circles in the state, Turnbull has also been a practical printer and newspaperman as well as a teacher of journalism. He was graduated from the University of Washington in 1915 and was called to Oregon two years later by the late Dean Eric W. Allen, founder of the school of journalism.

He served as professor of journalism until 1944 when he was made acting dean following the death of Dean Allen, and was later appointed full dean. Besides Oregon, Turnbull has served on the faculties of the universities of California, Nebraska and at Stanford.

During his 31 years of teaching he kept in touch with active newspaper work by serving on the staffs of the Seattle Times, San Francisco Chronicle and Portland Oregonian. Turnbull is a member of Phi Beta Kappa and Sigma Delta Chi. In 1949 he was selected as the state's outstanding newspaperman by the Oregon Newspaper Publishers association.

Dean Turnbull came to the Albany paper soon after he finished doing research and writing copy for the seventy-fifth anniversary issue of OLD OREGON in October.

The new building addition connecting Oregon and Commerce halls begins to take shape as construction continues. The addition, along with the two renovated buildings will constitute the new Commonwealth hall, expected to be ready for occupancy next fall.

THE ALUMNI

Alumni Hold Institute

The fourth annual Oregon Alumni institute, sponsored by the Portland Alumni association, will be held at the Multnomah hotel in Portland on Saturday, March 1, beginning at 2:00 p.m.

Dedicated to the proposition that learning can be fun, this outstanding program, which has drawn large crowds in recent years, features prominent faculty members from the University in entertaining talks on topics of current interest.

The Institute program will begin at 2:00 p.m. featuring four speakers. Dean James H. Gilbert '03, emeritus professor of economics, will lead off with a talk entitled, "Bulging Budgets and Teeming Taxes," in which he will discuss the tax situation and its relationship to the proposed national budget. A popular speaker, Dr. Gilbert will be making his fourth consecutive appearance on an Institute program.

Kenneth J. O'Connell, professor of law, will discuss "Little Known Facts About Women's Legal Rights," flavored with many humorous anecdotes on the legal position of women through the ages. "Miracle Drugs Today," is the topic chosen by Dr. Francis J. Reithel, associate professor of chemistry. In this talk, Dr. Reithel notes the advances made in modern medicine with the discoveries of cortisone, penicillin, and other anti-biotics.

The final Institute speaker will be George Hopkins '21, professor of piano, in a talk entitled "Long-Haired Music Gets a Crew Cut." Using the piano keyboard as his laboratory, Mr. Hopkins will demonstrate how all music, both classical and modern, is composed.

Immediately following the Institute at 5:15 p.m., a social hour will give those attending an opportunity to meet old friends and classmates.

The finale will be a banquet at 6:30 p.m. featuring a talk by Congressman Harris Ellsworth '22 in which he will discuss the first three months of congressional actions and what they will mean to Oregon. Preliminary talks will feature Dr. William C. Jones, dean of administration, and Len Casanova, head football coach.

All alumni, parents, and friends of the University are invited. Reservations may be secured through Richard C. McClintic, United States National Bank, in Portland. Tickets including the Institute program, social hour and banquet are $3.50 per person.

General chairman for the program is Ray E. Vester '21. He will be assisted by a committee composed of Richard C. McClintic '47, Wallace Cannon '24, Hal E. Short '33, Morris H. Rotenberg '35, Mrs. Omar C. Palmer '32, Mr. and Mrs. Walter H. Evans, Jr. '32, '37, Charlotte Johnson '51, Mrs.

Ray E. Vester '21 will be general chairman for the program of the fourth annual Oregon Alumni institute, to be held in Portland on March 4.

Gordon H. Keane '33, Randall S. Jones '24, president of the Portland Alumni association, and Les Anderson '43, alumni director.

Oregon Songs Recorded

The first album of University of Oregon songs ever published will be released for sale on or about April 1.

Songs to be featured are "Mighty Oregon" by the University of Oregon band, under the direction of Robert Vagner, and "As I Sit and Dream at Evening," and the "Oregon Pledge Song" by the University Singers directed by Donald Allton. There will be two additional selections featuring the band with a march paraphrase from "The Chocolate Soldier," and a choral rendition of "Oh What a Beautiful City," by the Singers.

The two-record album will be attractively designed in two colors with a large picture of Deady Hall on the cover. For the first printings records will be made at a 78 r.p.m. speed, and will bear the R.C.A. recording label. If the demand is sufficient, an additional printing will be made for 45 r.p.m. records.

The album is being produced under the sponsorship of the University of Oregon Alumni Association in co-operation with the School of Music, and all sales will be handled exclusively by the alumni office.

Winter Firesides Scheduled

The second annual series of Sunday evening alumni firesides for alumni and friends in Lane County are now being conducted during the winter term.

Featured speakers on this year's program include: Dr. Paul S. Dull, associate professor of history and political science, speaking on the topic "What Next in Asia?" on January 20; Dr. William S. Laughlin, assistant professor of anthropology, "New Uses of Old Bones," on February 10; Kenneth J. O'Connell, professor of law, "Adam's Rib," on February 24; and George Hopkins '21, professor of piano, "Music as You Like It," on March 9.

The annual series is held in the Dad's Lounge of the Erb Memorial Union starting at 7:00 p.m. on the date mentioned. Each talk is followed by a short period of questions and discussion and the serving of refreshments.

The Fireside Committee is headed by Otto Vonderheit, director for Lane County, assisted by a committee composed of Dr. and Mrs. Robin Overstreet, Mr. and Mrs. Willis Warren, Mr. and Mrs. Winfield H. Atkinson, Mr. Joe Earley, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Les Anderson, Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth W. Moore, Dr. and Mrs. Verne Adams, Mr. and Mrs. Leo Deffenbacher, and Mrs. Vonderheit.

Although the series is designed especially for the alumni in Lane County, all alumni from surrounding areas are invited to attend.

Alumni Leaders Meet

The fourth annual Alumni Leader's Conference will be held in the Erb Memorial Union Building on the University campus Saturday, February 16.

Those attending the meeting will be members of the executive committee, county directors, club presidents, and other leaders in the Alumni Association.

The purpose of the conference is to achieve a finer coordination of alumni effort throughout the State, and to bring a thorough understanding to every alumni group of the organization, activities, problems, and programs of the University and its Alumni association.

The leaders will hear talks by members of the faculty, athletic staff, and heads of various alumni committees. William N. Russell '35, president of the association, and Charles R. Holloway, Jr. '35, vice-president will preside.

Executive Body Enlarged

Five additional appointments to the executive Committee of the Alumni Association were recently announced by William N. Russell '35, president.

Filling the newly-created post of treasurer will be Willis C. Warren '30 who is associated with the First National Bank of Eugene.

Members-at-large selected were: William Harrow '40 of Portland; E. Stanley Goodell '23 of Portland; Howard A. Page '31 of Coos Bay; and Dean William C. Jones, dean of administration of the University of Oregon. Harrow is associated with the traffic department of United Air Lines; Goodell is general manager of the Dant and Russell Lumber Company; and Page is sales manager for the Coos Head Lumber company.

The appointments were made to fulfill an amendment to the constitution adopted at the 1951 Homecoming meeting. The amendment creates a separate post of treasurer, and four additional members-at-large one of whom shall be a member of the University faculty.

This brings the total membership of the Executive Committee to twelve. Others serving are William N. Russell '35, president; Charles R. Holloway, Jr. '35 vice-president; Lester E. Anderson '43, secretary; Herbert J. Darby '23, immediate past president; and Orval N. Thompson '35, Harry A. D. Smith '21, and James W. Hubbard '38, all members-at-large.

The Executive Committee is the main governing body of the Alumni Association. It considers all problems confronting the Association, and has the power to act on all matters pertaining to its welfare.

New County Directors

Three new county director appointments were recently announced by Alumni Association President William N. Russell '35.

Replacing Paul Patterson '23 in Washington County will be Don MacKenzie '48 who is in the automobile business in Hillsboro. In Clackamas County, George Hibbard '34, a practicing attorney, in Oregon City succeeds Frank McKinney '42 who recently moved to Salem.

Richard E. Watson '39 will replace William A. Barker '36 who resigned recently. Watson is associated with Conrad Bruce and Company in Medford.

Oregon Alumni Tours

Principal cities in Eastern Oregon and Boise, Idaho were stop-over points for the Alumni Tour in late November. Making the trip were Dean James H. Gilbert '03, Dr. E. G. Ebbighausen of the physics department, George Hopkins '21 of the school of music, Dean William C. Jones, dean of administration, and Les Anderson '43, alumni director.

A Sunday evening reception at the Vert Club in Pendleton greeted the group on their first stop on November 25. The one and a half hour program was followed by serving of refreshments. George Corey '38, director for Umatilla County, was chairman.

LaGrande was the next stop where more than 50 alumni from that community turned out for an evening dinner meeting on November 26. Raymond O. Williams '14, director for Union county, handled arrangements.

For the first time in many years, a University of Oregon program appeared on Enterprise, that stop being made on November 27. Although the evening program was sponsored by the local Lions club, all alumni in Wallowa County were invited as guests of the organization. All but three alumni in the entire county were present. Asa Eggleston '22, director for Wallowa County, headed the committee on arrangements.

The following day saw the group in Baker for an evening meeting at the Baker Hotel where some 75 alumni from that community heard the entertaining program. E. S. "Ox" Wilson, director for Baker County, was in charge.

Thursday, November 29 the Tour stopped at Ontario where Earl Blackaby, director for Malheur County, arranged an evening dinner meeting.

The tour finale was at Boise, Idaho where a crowd of approximately 60 alumni, including Mrs. Len Jordan (Grace Edgington '16), wife of Idaho's Governor Len Jordan '23 attended a dinner meeting at the Boise Hotel. Arrangements were made by a committee from the Boise Alumni Club, headed by Lloyd Tupling '39.

The traveling party also appeared before numerous civic clubs and high school assemblies along the way.

McMinnville Tour

The Alumni Tour made its first visit to McMinnville on January 28 where a dinner meeting was held for local alumni at the New Hudson Cafe.

Dean James H. Gilbert '03, emeritus professor of economics, Len Casanova, football coach, Dr. E. W. S. Laughlin, associate professor of anthropology, and Dean Theodore Kratt of the school of music were the featured speakers.

William O'Malley '46, county director for Yamhill County, made the arrangements.

John F. Lebor '28 is new vice-president and treasurer of the Federated Department Stores, Inc.

Gain Political Posts

Four University alumni were elected to positions on the state executive board of the Young Republicans when that group held its state convention in Portland in December.

Clay Meyers '49 was elected state chairman, Ed Peterson '51 and Ellen Christensen '52 were unopposed in their bids for vice-president-at-large and treasurer respectively, and Ed Georgeff '48 was elected to the board of representatives from the third congressional district.

Becomes Army News Editor

Capt. Robert F. Karolevitz '50 has been named news editor of the Eighth Army's public information office in Korea, according to a recent army release.

Captain Karolevitz, who received his master's degree in journalism, from Oregon was a graduate of South Dakota State college. He entered the army in 1943 and served as historical editor with the 25th infantry division in the Pacific theatre.

He was a member of the International Typographical union and served on the University of Oregon Press staff before being recalled to active duty in February 1951.

Prior to going to Korea in November of 1951, Karolevitz was public information officer at the Seattle Port of Embarkation. While on duty there, he was instrumental in developing Seattle's famous "Welcome Lane" for returning Korean war veterans.

Lebor Gains Post

John F. Lebor '28 was appointed vice-president and treasurer of the Federated Department Stores, Inc., one of the nation's largest retailing groups according to word received from the president of the organization. The appointment was effective in November.

An authority on tax matters, Lebor recently was elected a member of the board of directors of the corporation. He had held the single position of treasurer since joining Federated in 1946.

An authority on tax matter, Lebor recently appeared before the senate ways and means committee on behalf of the American Retail Federation.

Born in Portland, Lebor now lives in Cincinnati, Ohio. Prior to joining Federated he was secretary-treasurer of the York corporation, on the financial staff of Radio-Keith-Orpheum and security analyst for Scudder, Stephens & Clark.

New Portland Constitution

The Board of Directors of the Portland Alumni Association unanimously approved a new constitution for that body to be presented for adoption at the Portland Alumni Institute on March 1.

Three of Portland's leading attorneys, all Oregon alumni, played leading roles in drafting the new document. All have long been active in alumni affairs in Portland.

Serving were Hugh Biggs '27 who served as student body president as an undergraduate and later dean of men; Bert S. Gooding '26, who played on the varsity football team and served as president of the Portland Alumni Association in 1942; and John W. Kendall '35, immediate-past-president of the Association who has also been a member of the board of directors for the past several years.

The constitution provides that all persons who reside within 50 miles of Portland shall be considered as members. An annual meeting shall be held each year in Portland between February 1 and April 1 for the purpose of transacting such business as may be necessary.

The affairs of the Association shall be governed by a board of nine directors of whom three shall be elected each year, each to serve a term of three years. Directors shall be nominated by a committee appointed by the president with the final election to take place at the annual meeting.

Officers of the Association shall include a president, vice-president, secretary and a treasurer, each of whom shall be elected by the board of directors from among its own members. Officers shall serve for a term of one year.

The constitution further provides that there shall be no dues, but that all funds shall be raised from the activities of the Association. Amendments may be made at any annual meeting.

In proposing the adoption of this document, the board of directors recognize a need which has existed for many years for a formal statement of organization. For a complete copy of the constitution, see page 20.

Magazine Publishes Letter

One of the letters sent out by the Alumni Association requesting renewal of alumni memberships was recently published in The Reporter of Direct Mail Advertising, a national magazine devoted to techniques used in direct mail.

The reprinted letter was processed from an offset plate reproduced in reverse. In order to read the copy, it was necessary for the recipient to hold the letter before a mirror or turn the page and hold it up to the light.

The letter was one of four used last year to seek membership renewals. It was cited by the magazine as "an adaptable idea."

Bay Area Pre-game Party

Alumni in the San Francisco Bay area gathered at a pre-game party at the Cow Palace on December 27 for cocktails and a snack supper preceding the Oregon-Wisconsin basketball game.

Edmund Madden '31 is president of the Honolulu alumni club, familiarly known as the "Diamond Head Ducks."

Arrangements were handled by William W. Chambreau, Jr. '39, president of the San Francisco Alumni Club, and James Ferguson '34, the club's vice-president.

The next gathering of alumni in the Bay Area will be held March 27 when the Alumni Tour will make its first appearance in that area.

Southern Oregon Tours

The Alumni Tour's second longest swing of the year took the traveling educational group into four southern Oregon cities late in January.

The tour party consisted of Dean James H. Gilbert '03, professor emeritus of economics, Dean Theodore Kratt of the school of music, Dr. E. G. Ebbighausen of the physics department, Bill Bowerman '34, track coach, and Les Anderson '43, alumni director.

Coos Bay was the first stop on January 14 where an evening meeting for alumni and friends was held at Harold's Club. Bill Huggins '47, substituting for his father, George C. Huggins '16, Coos County director, headed the committee which made all arrangements.

A large crowd turned out at Roseburg on January 15 to a lavishly decorated banquet room in the Umpqua Hotel. George Luoma '42, Douglas County director acted as chairman assisted by Dick DeBernardi '48. The Oregon Mother's Club of Roseburg took charge of decorations. Jim Aiken, ex-Oregon football coach and now a resident of Roseburg, acted as master of ceremonies for the evening meeting.

The next stop was at Medford on January 16 where despite a winter storm, more than 60 attended the evening meeting at the Medford Hotel. Dick Watson '39, Jackson County director, was in charge.

The tour ended at Klamath Falls on January 17 where bad weather also failed to discourage attendance. John Houston '21, Klamath County director, headed arrangements. Andrew Collier '13 acted as master of ceremonies.

The group accepted invitations to appear before seven high school assemblies along the route. In addition, Dean Gilbert spoke before civic clubs in Roseburg, Medford, and Klamath Falls.

Heads Honolulu Alumni

Edmund F. Madden '31 this year heads the alumni group of Honolulu, Hawaii, familiarly known as the "Diamond Head Ducks."

After receiving his B.A. degree at Oregon, Madden spent a year at Reed College and at Creighton University. He received his D.M.D. degree from North Pacific college in Portland in 1937.

After five years service with the United States Army dental corps, he served six months on the staff of the Oregon Dental school. Since 1946 he has practiced dentistry in Honolulu.

Madden was elected to head the Honolulu group by a unanimous vote when elections were held last summer.

Report Adopted

The report of the alumni committee to study the deferred living plan at the University (see page 10) was presented to the Executive Committee of the Alumni Association at a special meeting in Portland on March first.

The Executive Committee unanimously passed the following resolution:

"That the report of the alumni committee to study the deferred living plan, dated February 16, 1952, be endorsed by this Association with the following exception:

"Inasmuch as the University of Oregon has not previously nor does it intend to prescribe rushing and pledging regulations, the Executive Committee does not endorse the recommendations outlined in paragraph 7 of this report, but reaffirms the present policy of allowing the students to determine such rules and regulations."

The Executive Committee also expressed the hope that all alumni would make a sincere effort to acquaint themselves with the facts contained in the report as well as other official information that has been released concerning the deferred living plan. The Committee also noted many instances of misinformation and statements about the plan which are ill-founded.

Oregon Pigger

as living on a farm where pigs are raised—as she is in the 1909 version. In one variant the boy offers no excuse but silently steals away from his quarters. His fellow students follow him to a near-by farm and are told by the farmer that the truant and the farmer's daughter are out "feeding the pigs." Search for the pair discloses that their activity is not exactly that described by the unsuspecting parent. Another story says that the pigs were real: that the student went faithfully to a farm to help a farmer take care of his stock, especially the pigs, simply in order that he might become better acquainted with the farmer's beautiful daughter and have an opportunity to be with her frequently. In it there is no element of deception, unless the daughter is deceived, and the usual fraternity or dormitory mates are not at all hoaxed. In fact, they know the purposes of his visits and apply the term to him as a joke, which he shares. Piggering, then, means simply a device for becoming acquainted with a girl.

A favorite element in the story for narrative expansion is the means by which the truth is discovered by the student's colleagues. Usually he is followed, sometimes by his fraternity brothers in an automobile, and is found in the company of the girl on some farm or while walking along a country road, or attending a Grange square dance, or strolling in town, or sitting on the porch of the girl's home on some quiet Eugene street—but always at a time when by his own avowal he is supposed to be tending swine. In one version, the discovery of the truth is made when a fraternity brother overhears the boy address a girl student in a biology class by the name he has said was that of a pet pig.

But a pig is usually somewhere in the story. "Why the boy from a farm should choose the word pig instead of many other words is quite silly to me," said one girl, with an unsophisticated vocabulary, in telling the story. "There may have been some connection in his mind between girls and pigs. What an awful thought." There may have been, and there probably was; returning veterans after 1946 snickeringly assured everyone within hearing that "pig" meant "prostitute," or at least a woman generous with her favors.

Another frequent explanation holds that the term came into use when the university was small and when men students greatly outnumbered the women, and dates, consequently, were hard to obtain. A very popular lad who had a near-monopoly on them was said to be "hogging" feminine companionship, and so was piggering. One alumnus pointed out that in 1900 at Park College in Missouri piggering had two meanings: the use of an aid or pony in Latin and Greek and, second, a boy who tried to be too popular with the girls. Still another tale tells of a popular boy with many dates; his name happened to be Peigher, and his name, slightly corrupted in pronunciation, was transferred to his activity.

Yet pigs remain, and a university, full of dignity and dedicated to the humanities and the arts, is no place for them. Forty-five miles north of the university, however, is the rival Oregon State College, known until 1932 as the Oregon Agricultural College. There, in the belief of university students, pigs might plausibly and quite probably be found as commonplace objects, and to Oregon State College the story is being transferred by the university students, despite the fact that at the State College the act of dating is called fussing and never piggering, the latter being restricted by State College students to the university. Except for an unverified and unique statement published in the Midnight Doughnut in 1909 that pigger "originated at Corvallis — that's enough!" there is no evidence that either the term or the story was ever current at the college. One recent version, told by a students at the Agricultural College began escorting co-eds to games and thus avoiding what the university students considered the proprieties. To crush the rustics at their next such unseemly display of bad manners, the university men decided to shout some derisive epithet at couples from the college, and, "borrowing an animal well known to university senior, retains all the major themes and details of the Pigger's Guide version, but is laid not at the university but at "some college—Oregon State or someplace," and another discards the whole motif of the excuse and rests squarely upon intercollegiate rivalry. According to it, when athletics were started at the two campuses, games were attended only by men students, the girls being thought "too delicate to watch such brutal play." Eventually the Staters," as the version has it, cried "Pigger!"

The transfer of the original story to the neighboring campus combines the usual themes with a curious element that may rest upon fact. One such version takes the familiar yarn as its base but has the boy use as an excuse a desire to visit some family friends named Hoag who live in Corvallis. Each weekend, therefore, the student traveled to Corvallis, and all went well until some of his fraternity brothers themselves happened to be in Corvallis and there found him in the company of a girl. She then is the "hog" he has been visiting and so thereafter is called his "pig," by a fairly clear and bawdy application of the slang term. In another version, dated by its narrator as having occurred in 1916, "at which time the current usage and legend of the word had not developed," students at Oregon Agricultural College dated the several beautiful daughters of a man named Hogg who lived on the outskirts of Corvallis. When a student set off to meet one of the Hogg girls, he explained that he was going piggering that night.

Most of the early stories apply the word pig to the girl, and such an application, sometimes in the slang meaning, was commonly implied in student publications. Later the derogatory meaning generally disappeared, not to revive until the returning veterans pointed out the "real meaning," as they expressed it. Connotations remained bad, however, and the word was under censure. The result of that censure was slight; probably the censure itself helped to preserve the use of the term as the students jealously continued the story and term in the face of criticism. The increasing cult of sophistication also attempted to discard the word, story and tradition as something naive, and made a sophisticated attempt to discover a new and legitimate source for the word itself. To offset criticisms, various attempts were made to trace the word to some source without an unpleasant meaning and quite respectable in origin. A new etymology, removed from the cant tradition, was sought.

One such etymology, appearing in an article by Dan Clark II and titled "Dean Allen Ferrets Out True Source of Piggling," appeared in the Daily Emerald on October 6, 1936, and has since frequently reappeared, usually without credit to its originator. Clark's account told how the dean of the School of Journalism, visiting Denmark, came upon the piger in a Copenhagen newspaper; after a start of recognition, Dean Allen found in his Danish dictionary that the word meant "girl." On his return to the university, the dean checked records at the registrar's office and found that "many years ago" several students from Denmark had been enrolled. "The spoke English with difficulty," Clark explained, "and at some time must have reverted to their native tongue when referring to those of the feminine variety."

So the word, the story, and the cry continue, trailing clouds of explanation. Many students accept as true the basic story, and alumni are frequently adamant that it is the true and only explanation—and it may be, for their versions contain enough circumstantial detail to make the event not merely plausible but possible, though if the story does rest upon a real event, that event very probably followed the introduction of the word itself, and the word, in turn, probably was pig, in the cant meaning. Other students and some alumni reject the legend completely but supply new versions that depend upon transfer of other locations, upon puns, or upon language differences. And all tellers of the story, believers and scoffers alike, take pains to emend and to develop details to make their own versions plausible, to keep the story from having what to them might be inconsistencies in custom, place, or condition. It is the one major tradition at the university among students; others are sentimentally revived now and then, but piggers are always with them.

Basketball Hopes

From Florida he went to Hawaii as assistant recreation director under his former football boss, Tex Oliver. He eventually finished his naval tour as a chief petty officer on the aircraft carrier Wasp in the Pacific where he was coach of the ship's basketball team.

When Borcher came home after VJ day he had a talk with John Warren, the man he eventually was to replace. Warren smoothed the way for Borcher to take the basketball coaching job at Marshfield high in 1945. Soon after, he was proving he had what was necessary to coach winning basketball.

For his six seasons there he compiled a fine won-lost record of 158-38, and was in the state tournament every year. Highlights of Marshfield's tournament competition was a state championship in 1947 and a second-place finish in 1948. The Pirates also fashioned a 37 game win streak which was broken in 1948 by the Grants Pass team under Borcher's old teammate, Hank Anderson.

It was at Marshfield high that Borcher evolved the idea of playing records mostly Dixieland jazz, before games and during halftime periods. He still does this at Oregon.

While in Coos Bay he was also the cornet-playing leader of a Dixieland dance band. Not the outdoor sportsman type, music is second only to basketball among his interests.

Borcher's system of basketball utilizes the traditional Duck fast break whenever possible, and his set offense is based on teamwork and constant screening to break men loose for good shots. Defensive play is also emphasized.

Mainstays of this year's team are All-Coast Forward Bob Peterson, Hunt and tall Chet Noe. Their new coach, who is a cheerful, talkative optimist, doesn't follow the traditional crying towel formula.

Charles Heltzel has been named Oregon Public Utilities Commissioner by Governor McKay.

It's nice to pick up the telephone and hear an alert, friendly voice come over the wires.

It may be the familiar "Voice with a Smile" of the telephone operator. Or a friend or business customer. Or a stranger you're meeting — and judging — for the first time by telephone.

Any time is a good time for telephone courtesy. But right now, when the rush is on and minutes are scarce, it is doubly appreciated.

All 'round the clock it saves time and tempers and helps everybody get more things done, more quickly.

Acetylene still shows the way

Your nicest textiles—as well as vitamins, headache remedies, plastic garden hose, or welding on your car—may stem from this versatile gas

FORTY YEARS AGO acetylene gas made from calcium carbide was used for home and street lighting, and was in common use for bicycle and automobile lights. Though these old lights have long since gone out, acetylene has gone on to chemical greatness.

IN CHEMICALS—Today, acetylene is the parent of hundreds of chemicals and chemical products used to make plastics, insect sprays, vitamins, aspirin, sulfa drugs and many other things.

Acetylene is the source of some of the basic chemicals in dynel, the new wonder textile fiber. It also goes into the Vinylite plastics used in beautiful home furnishing materials, protective coatings, and a host of other products.

IN METAL FORMING—In the production and use of metals, acetylene teamed up with oxygen has revolutionized many industries. From mines-to-mills-to-manufacturer, you will find oxy-acetylene cutting, welding and metal conditioning.

50 YEARS OF PROGRESS—The people of Union Carbide have produced acetylene for over half a century. Through continuous research they have made many remarkable acetylene discoveries important in the lives of all of us.
