The Telephone Pole That Became a Memorial

The cottage on Lincoln Street in Portland, Oregon, is shaded by graceful trees and covered with ivy.

Many years ago, A. H. Feldman and his wife remodeled the house to fit their dreams . . . and set out slips of ivy around it. And when their son, Danny, came along, he, too, liked to watch things grow. One day, when he was only nine, he took a handful of ivy slips and planted them at the base of the telephone pole in front of the house.

Time passed . . . and the ivy grew, climbing to the top of the pole. Like the ivy, Danny grew too. He finished high school, went to college. The war came along before he finished—and Danny went overseas. And there he gave his life for his country.

Not very long ago the overhead telephone lines were being removed from the poles on Lincoln Street. The ivy-covered telephone pole in front of the Feldman home was about to be taken down. Its work was done.

But, when the telephone crew arrived, Mrs. Feldman came out to meet them. "Couldn't it be left standing?" she asked. And then she told them about her son.

So the pole, although no longer needed, wasn't touched at all. At the request of the telephone company, the Portland City Council passed a special ordinance permitting the company to leave it standing. And there it is today, mantled in ivy, a living memorial to Sergeant Danny Feldman.

Since arriving in Eugene, I have found that there is a new twist to the old adage that someone is always a little worse off than you are. Not that I'm in a bad way. Not at all. The new twist is that I have found others who have as fond and sincere an enthusiasm for Oregon as I have—and I have been accused of being the perennial sophomore!

First of all, Jim Frost, '47, has returned to the campus as a member of the journalism faculty. He is really filled with ambition to lend a hand towards the continuing development of the University—and of trying new ideas to describe to others what is happening on the campus.

So many alumni have been gone so long that today were they to visit the campus they would need a guide. To these alumni—as to all—Jim wants to be certain that we tell the dramatic story of the University's heritage, its present-day scene, and its future. He will be the real working editor of Old Oregon, and will continue to bring you the high quality of Old Oregon with which you have become so familiar—an Old Oregon which has won so wide a recognition for its excellence. We will hear and read more about Jim Frost in the years to come but let me tell you now of another recent campus visitor.

Although he was on a business trip to Portland from New York, Phil Bergh, '27, took about five hours out of a very busy schedule to jump into his sister's car and drive to Eugene. He particularly wanted to complete his personally-filmed record of the campus.

From his home in New York, Phil brought greetings and questions from the many displaced Webfoots who seem to acquire needed sustenance for their busy metropolitan lives from the slightest bit of news about Oregon. While Oregon has many wonderful alumni throughout the nation, the New York alumni are unmatched for their loyalty and interest in the University. In spite of their varied personal activities and hurried pace, they need only a postcard to bring them many miles into New York City for an Oregon gathering.

Phil has several of his Class of '27 in the New York area who share his deep allegiance to Oregon, and I know that he will have many pleasant moments telling them about his visit to the campus. Perhaps the biggest highlight of his trip to Eugene, which, unfortunately, cannot be announced until December, was the planning of a most unusual project for the New York alumni.

These men are two more refreshing alumni who will help keep our own spirit at high pitch in the years ahead. How very fortunate we are to have such alumni who acknowledge that the University is the one institution that has succeeded best in sustaining what to them is a wholeness of life.

COVER

One of the most impressive events of the year on the campus is Charter Day, commemorating the founding-date of the University of Oregon—October 18, 1876. Mike Hart, of the University photographic bureau, caught this scene during the Charter Day Convocation in McArthur Court as Dr Barnaby C. Keeney, President of Brown University, was speaking. Captured here in this picture is some of the earnestness, the color and the purpose of a University dedicated to higher learning in a free society.

IT'S HOMECOMING TIME! For weeks the campus has been buzzing with preparations for a great 1955 Homecoming Weekend, November 18 and 19. Alumni returning to the campus will see the traditional bonfire, noise parade, Homecoming signs, variety show, a suspense-filled football game with Oregon State, a great dance, and open doors from one end of the campus to the other.

If numbers of requests for hotel and motel accommodations mean anything, this year's Homecoming promises to be one of the largest in attendance—countless former students are heading back to visit the campus, many coming from distant points—and many for the first time since graduation.

The mill race has been restored—and Deady and Villard halls are resplendent in their fall garments of brilliantly-colored leaves. And to make certain that you will feel welcome, this year's Homecoming theme conveys that wonderful Oregon friendliness—"An Open Door for Alums of Yore."

Living organizations are scheduling after-the-game buffets and coffee hours for visiting alumni. Campus professional and honorary societies are planning informal get-togethers with former members.

The Homecoming Luncheon will be held in the Erb Memorial Student Union as a box lunch affair. Each class will be clearly designated so that your own particular friends can be easily located.

Saturday morning the "O" on Skinner's Butte will receive its annual coat of paint.

The Oregon "Seal," now in front of the Union, will be scrubbed and polished by squads of "enthusiastic" freshmen. Along "Hello Walk" the order of the day for undergraduates will be green ribbons and rooster lids.

One of the real reasons for you to come to the campus at Homecoming is to see old friends and to reminisce. You may want to view for yourself the great strides in progress, and growth that has been going on at Oregon since you finished. As an alumnus you will want to know why Oregon is fast becoming one of the nation's great universities. So come and join us—see for yourself—November 18-19—for the week end will be—"An Open Door For Alums of Yore!"

*Charter Day—October 18;
Oregon's 79th Anniversary*

The Mission of Universities

October 18, 1955 marked the second annual public observance of Charter Day at the University of Oregon. Now permanently part of Oregon tradition, Charter Day commemorates the University's founding on October 18, 1876. The University—its students, its faculty, its alumni, and its friends—seeks on Charter Day to express its gratitude to the State of Oregon and its citizens whose efforts and resources during the past seventy-nine years have made possible its hope to become one of America's great centers of higher learning. Charter Day, then, is a time to assess the University's greatness—and a time to examine the challenges ahead.

In observance of the 79th Anniversary, Roman Totenburg, violinist from New York City, was presented in concert at the Erb Memorial Union, Monday evening, October 17. On Tuesday afternoon, October 18, a formal convocation with a faculty procession was held at McArthur Court. Attired in colorful academic regalia, the faculty marched across the campus to music from the Alumni carillon on top of Erb Memorial Union. Heading the procession was the platform party consisting of President O. Meredith Wilson, Dr. Barnaby Keeney, The Most Reverend Edward D. Howard, archbishop of Portland, who gave the invocation, Dr. R. E. Kleinsorge, President of the Oregon State Board of Higher Education, Chancellor John R. Richards, State System of Higher Education, University of Oregon Alumni President Orval Thompson, and ASUO President Bud Hinkson.

Dr. Barnaby Keeney, President of Brown University, Providence, R. I., gave the convocation address, "The Mission of Universities."

Left—Charter Day convocation speaker, Dr. Barnaby C. Keeney, President of Brown University in Providence, Rhode Island. Born in Halfway, Oregon, a small town near the Idaho border, he graduated from the University of North Carolina in 1936, and received his M.A. and Ph.D. degrees from Harvard University. Dr. Keeney joined Brown University in 1946 as an assistant professor of history, and in 1949 was appointed dean of the graduate school. This fall he was named president of Brown University.

ONE of the great works of the history of the early church is Harnack, The Mission and Expansion of Christianity. In view of what has happened, "The Mission and Expansion of the Universities" might be a better title. It may well seem that the mission itself has changed, though I do not think so. Certainly it is a far cry from the university of the 13th century to the composite university of today.

There were no universities in classical antiquity. Rather there were schools and academies where a few students met with one extraordinary teacher who taught them, or tried to teach them, what he was good at.

The university, as we know it, had its origins in the 11th and 12th centuries. This was the time when Western Europe was advancing on several fronts: government was being restored from the chaos of early feudalism; the economy was reviving, especially in agriculture and considerably in urban development and overseas trade; and, for the first time since the 5th century, Europe could afford the intellectual, having solved, or approached the solution to, the pressing problem of survival.

In the early 11th century an enterprising youth could not find a university; he was fortunate if he could find a competent teacher from whom he could learn the elements of the Latin language and something about habits of thought. He was extremely fortunate if, having acquired these things, he was able to sit at the feet of one of the productive scholars of the period. It was these productive scholars who were the acorns from which the universities grew. They settled in the cathedrals where they performed various religious duties, but also, and eventually primarily, they taught young men who were destined for the clergy. As they taught, they wrote and, before they wrote, they thought.

The best of these cathedral schools produced the universities of Western Europe. They came to flower in the 13th century. As they gathered strength, they broke away from the cathedral, and the bishop who controlled it, and became independent foundations with some degree of academic freedom, at least locally. But their primary purpose was still the education of the clergy, for it was not thought necessary that other people acquire much education. Laymen did not begin to attend the universities until rather late in the 13th century and, even then, they were regarded as clerks so that mere attendance gave a man benefit of clergy.

Eventually some universities began to specialize—Paris was noted for the study of theology, Oxford for the study of science, Salerno for the study of medicine, and Bologna for the law. Clearly, as the mediaeval university grew, it became less and less a place to train clergy and more and more a place to impart general education and train specialists, lay and clerical.

In this same period, the college developed within the university, at first simply as a boarding house for poor students with an endowment to take care of part of their expenses. (There are colleges in this country today that are boarding houses for "poor" students in another sense.) But, eventually, in England the colleges took over the teaching function of the university and most teaching became a monopoly of the colleges; the university remained as an examining, a degree-granting, and, ultimately, as a governing body of the colleges within itself.

In the Renaissance the human intellect burgeoned and, in some ways, freed itself, but not in the universities, for these remained preoccupied with the learning of the past and made no successful effort to adapt their study and their teaching to the developing intellectual society of the 16th century. They remained the home of the scholastics and were ridiculed by the humanists, who pointed out that theses on the subjects, "How many angels can dance on the point of a pin?" and "Whether a chimera, buzzing in a void, can devour second intentions," were of little practical use in the development of the society of the day. This is perhaps a familiar theme to us now.

In the 17th and 18th centuries, the great period for the introduction of the university from England to this country, we were concerned primarily with education in the classics, as developed outside of the universities in the Renaissance. The library of Brown University, as it existed at the time of the American Revolution, is a small collection as it stands today, and a curious one. Many of the books in it would have been appropriate to the library of a scholar in the 14th century; others bear the mark of the Renaissance and of the 17th century; but few represent the significant writings of the period in which they were collected. The library reflected the curriculum, though perhaps inadequately.

Then, in the first half of the 19th century, the numbers of students attending educational institutions of higher learning in New England declined absolutely, and declined even more proportionately to the increased population. The community lost its interest in higher education to such a point that Brown University did not receive a single gift for endowment to produce income in support of its mission for 40 years prior to 1850. In 1850, the then president, Francis Wayland, issued a report in which he analyzed what he found as the cause of the difficulty, namely that the universities were far out of touch with American life. He suggested that the curriculum be revised to bring it into contact with society as it was in 1850, and altered in the future to conform to its changing needs, and that students be permitted to study what they wished. This is the beginning, I think, of the elective system in American education. It is, perhaps, also the beginning of vocationalism in higher education, though I do not believe that Wayland meant that it should be, nor has it been in the university he served.

This is the text of the speech delivered by Dr. Barnaby C. Keeney, President of Brown University, at the University of Oregon Charter Day Convocation, October 18, 1955, in McArthur Court.

WAYLAND'S idea was capable of two applications. The first was that students be educated in the various ways of thinking and in knowledge, particularly the sciences, that had a relevance to them and to life in 1850 and now. The second application was the establishment of a complex and, in some ways, irrelevant institution, resembling a service station rather than a seminary, where students are trained rather than educated.

So much for history. What are the essentials of the university? The acorn from which it grew was the productive scholar and he is still its heart, though there are those who would call him some kind of a nut. Indeed, one difference between a university and a college, or between most universities and most colleges, is the emphasis on scholarship, sometimes confused with research. It is quite true that there are many productive scholars in colleges and it is even true that there are many unproductive professors in universities. But, fundamentally, the mission of the university is a dual one: to promote human knowledge and understanding through teaching and education and to promote human knowledge and understanding through scholarship by adding to the known and, even more important, to be understood. All the other objectives of the university are secondary, and some of their apparent objectives are irrelevant and even negative to the prime purpose.

THERE is great confusion in our institutions between education and training. Education is a slow, and difficult process; training, on the other hand, is sometimes difficult and often slow, but it is relatively simple. Ultimately, education must be achieved largely by the effort of the person who is becoming educated. Training of some sorts can be more passively achieved by the trainee, with most of the effort being called for on the part of the trainer. Education of the mind requires its development as an instrument of thought and the acquisition by that mind of something to think about. Training, on the other hand, produces the intelligent application of acquired knowledge and skills to a specific purpose, and does not necessarily have the result of helping toward education, though it may. Education, ultimately, is a matter of wisdom, training a matter of knowledge. One may almost make an analogy with Christian theology. Education as the means of the acquisition of wisdom and understanding has a place similar to the place of grace in the process of salvation, whereas training does not, just as good works without grace do not bring salvation.

Let me illustrate the difference between education and training by means of my late and, only by me, lamented dog. A well trained dog is docile: if he is told to lie down, he lies down; if he is told to stand up, he stands up. It is easy to train a dog; although the trainer has to put forth a good deal of effort, the dog simply has to learn a few key words. The trained dog is commonplace; an educated dog is unusual. My dog, as my children never tire of pointing out, was untrained, but I insist that he was highly educated. He never lay down when he was told to, he never stood up when he was told to, he never did anything he was told to; he thought things out carefully and proceeded as he thought best. In the course of his last year he bit two professors of English, one admission officer, two professors of chemistry, and the chaplain. In no case, could I disagree with his choice; he was a very discriminating dog. Occasionally he bit me, and even then he was right. Had he been trained, he would have behaved himself. He had no skills, he held no technical degrees, but he had a clear and independent mind and, once he had made it up, he followed his program through.

If I may flog this dead dog a little more, he had certain lacks as an educated individual: he was incapable of controlling his emotions, he was not in a state of spiritual grace, and his social adjustment was inadequate. All of these are necessary to an educated person, however he attains them.

If I may say, then, that the educated man is the wise man, I may go further and say that the wise man must have control of his social

EVERY June hundreds of fine football players graduate from universities across the country and this is only natural -- football players are students and come to the various schools to get an education as well as play football.

This educational process always causes problems for the football coaches in the matter of replacement of experienced personnel for the following season. This was particularly true at Oregon this fall when the veterans who numbered but a dozen, found their ranks had been thinned considerably with the departure of George Shaw, Jack Patera, Ron Pheister, Keith Tucker and more than a half dozen others who had played a major role in Oregon football over the previous seasons.

In their place came the rookies, perhaps one of the more exciting factors in college football. They are new names, new styles and new numbers for the fans to watch and pick their new favorites.

The Duck rookies, like many of their counterparts over the country, played a major role in Oregon's rapidly improving football team. How important their role was in Duck football is best demonstrated by the fact every member of the second team was a new man and there were three starters who were on hand for the first time as varsity men.

There was one other important new man in the starting line-up, Tom Crabtree at quarterback, and while he was a letterman last season as a halfback, his change in position might well qualify him for a place on the list of those who were tackling important jobs for the first time.

The full team of replacements mentioned earlier look like this in the normal alignment of a team:

Left end—J. C. Wheeler, a converted fullback from Oregon City who moved up from the 1954 Frosh team.

Left tackle—Jerry Kerschner, a 214-pound tackle who came to Oregon from Tacoma, Wash., and played for the Duck-

Center—Norm Chapman, a fine line-backer from Medford who was another member of the 1954 freshman squad.

Right guard—Harry Mondale, a sophomore who first played at Oregon in 1951 and then entered the service.

Right tackle—John Raventos, a 228-pound sophomore from Menlo Park, Calif., who was another of the Duckling regulars last fall.

Right end—Bill Tarrow, a fine end from Missoula, Montana, who played his first two years at Boise JC.

Quarterback—Jack Crabtree, a San Bernardino transfer who lives in Norwalk, Calif.

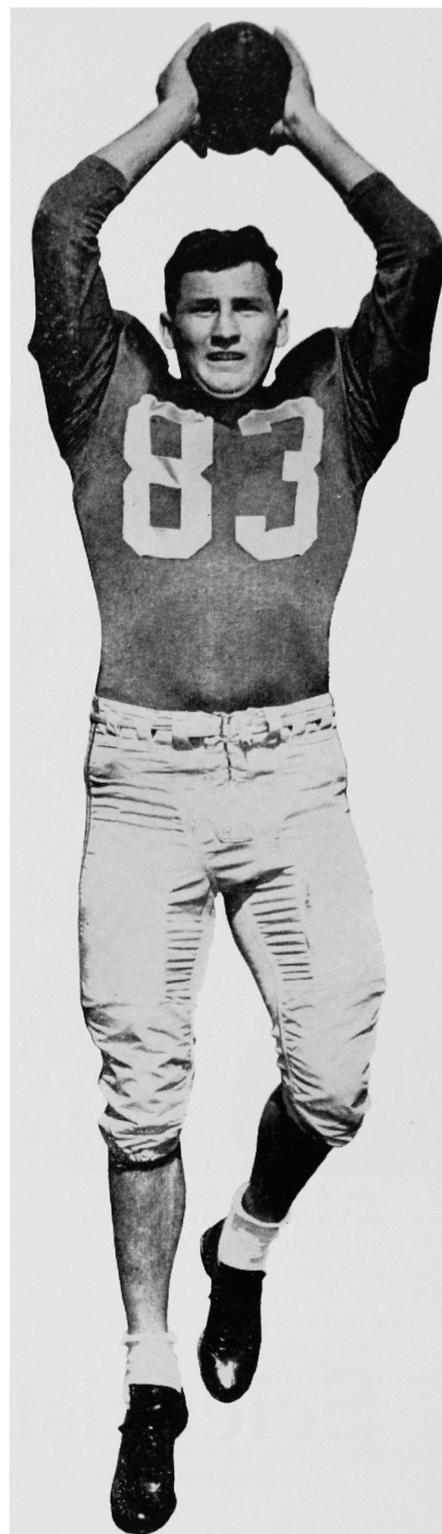

Lefa half—Jack Brown, a swift sophomore from Concord, Calif., who just returned from the service.

Right half—Chuck Osborne, another of the speedy Ducks backs and a junior from Turlock, Calif., who transferred from Menlo JC.

Fullback—Fred Miklancic, a good line-backer and runner from Homedale, Idaho, who played two years at Boise JC.

And then, of course, there are others like ends John Robinson of Daly City, Calif., and Milt Blevens of Grants Jass, guards Jack Hilfficker of Santa Rosa JC and Vern Scott of Portland, center Steve Bigelow of Coos Bay, half-back Leroy Phelps of San Bernardino and fullback George Krupicka of Mollala.

Watch them all, they have already meant much to Oregon football and will be making an even greater contribution to Oregon football before this season ends.

Dr. Walter H. Brattain, who received his M. A. degree from Oregon in '26, is one of the nation's leading scientists in the field of electronics.

ONE of the nation's most distinguished scientists in the field of electronics is Dr. Walter H. Brattain, who received his M. A. degree from the University in 1926. A member of the technical staff of Bell Laboratories for the past 26 years, he is co-inventor with Dr. John Bardeen of the transistor, one of the greatest single advancements in electronics.

The transistor, announced in 1948 by Bell Laboratories where it has been undergoing extensive development, is a tiny, revolutionary electronic device capable of doing most of the things a vacuum tube can do and many other things besides.

With long-life as one of its prime features, the transistor is already in use as an amplifier in telephone equipment, hearing aids, military apparatus, and other commercial applications. The transistor has no vacuum, grid or cathode, requires no warm-up time, and operates on extremely small amounts of power.

Dr. Brattain was born in Amoy, China, on February 10, 1902 and spent his childhood and youth in the State of Washington. He received a B. S. degree from Whitman College in 1924 before studying at the University of Oregon for his M. A. degree. In 1928 he received his Ph.D. degree from the University of Minnesota.

He joined Bell Telephone Laboratories in 1929 and his early work was in the field of thermionics, particularly the study of electronic emission from hot surfaces. The results of this work led to greater knowledge of adsorbed films on electronic emission. He has also studied frequency standards, magnetometers and infra-red phenomena.

Dr. Brattain took up the study of electrical conductivity and rectification phenomena in semiconductors, with a major portion of his attention devoted to copper-oxide varistors. He also studied the properties of silicon and germanium.

For 22 months during World War II Dr. Brattain was associated with the National Defense Research Committee at Columbia University where he studied magnetic detection of submarines. In the fall term of the 1952-53 academic year, Dr. Brattain was a visiting lecturer at Harvard University, where with two assistants he conducted a graduate course on the use of transistors in electrical circuits, and with Professor Harvey Brooks of the Division of Applied Science a seminar course on the questions of solid state physics underlying transistor behavior.

This year Dr. Brattain received honorary Doctor of Science degrees from Whitman College, Walla Walla, Washington, and Union College, Schenectady, New York. The University of Portland awarded him the same degree in 1952.

In 1954 he received the John Scott Medal in recognition of his work on the transistor. The medal is named for John Scott, a chemist of Edinburgh, Scotland, whose will in 1816 established the award and entrusted the administration to the City of Philadelphia. Previous recipients include Orville Wright, Thomas A. Edison, Madame Curie, Guglielmo Marconi, Lee de Forest, Dr. Irving Langmuir, Dr. Vannevar Bush and Sir Alexander Fleming.

Dr. Brattain was awarded the Stuart Ballantine Medal of the Franklin Institute in 1952. He is a Fellow of the American Physical Society and of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, and a member of the Franklin Institute, Phi Beta Kappa and Sigma Xi.

In 1935 Dr. Brattain married Karen Gilmore and they have one son, William Gilmore Brattain. The Brattains live in Chatham, New Jersey, near the Murray Hill, New Jersey Branch of Bell Telephone Laboratories.

Oregon's New Faculty Members Rank High

If a university can be measured by the quality and size of its faculty, Oregon should rank high among the nation's universities and colleges. For this fall, President O. Meredith Wilson appointed 83 new faculty and staff members, many who have outstanding academic and professional records.

Most of these new faculty appointees are filling vacancies created by retirements and resignations, and some are temporarily replacing faculty and staff members now on sabbatical leaves. Others have been added to meet the teaching and research demands of an expanding student enrollment.

Representative of Oregon's new faculty and staff members this year are Associate Professors John L. Hulteng, Journalism; Lynn S. Rodney, Health and Physical Education; Herman Rubin, Mathematics; and Elwood Vernon White, Chemistry.

Mr. Hulteng, who received a master's degree from Columbia University Graduate School of Journalism, has been with the Providence (R. I.) Journal-Bulletin for the past eight years, the last two as chief editorial writer. A former Nieman Fellow, he is a graduate of the University of North Dakota and began his newspaper career on the East Grand Forks Weekly Record in Minnesota.

Dr. Lynn Rodney, now directing the School of Health and Physical Education's new major studies program in the training of community and institutional recreation leaders, was formerly an executive representative of the National Recreation Association in the Pacific northwest. He received both his bachelor's and master's degrees from the State College of Washington, and his doctorate from the University of Michigan.

A recognized specialist in mathematical statistics, Dr. Herman Rubin received his three degrees — bachelor's, master's, and doctorate—from the University of Chicago. He is a member of the mathematics faculty in the College of Liberal Arts.

Another member of the College of Liberal Arts faculty, Dr. Elwood Vernon White was formerly a chemist at the Puget Sound Pulp and Timber Company in Bellingham, Washington. A graduate of the University of Toronto, he received his master's and doctorate degrees from McGill University in Montreal. At Oregon Dr. White will concentrate on carbohydrate chemistry.

Presents Paper

A University of Oregon physics department research program was the subject of a special report to the American Association of Physics Teachers at its meeting in Longview, Washington, November 4. Robert Bennet, research fellow in physics, delivered the paper. The project, a study of absorption bands of rubidium in the presence of foreign gases, is under the direction of Dr. S. Y. Ch'en, professor of physics, with a five-man staff.

This University of Oregon research project is supported by a recent National Science Foundation grant from Washington, D. C.

Goes to India

Dr. Charles Byrne, former chancellor of the Oregon state system of higher education, has been appointed director of the University of Oregon educational project in Nepal. He will be gone about 20 months, and will visit institutions in Manila, Bangkok and New Delhi, and universities in India before reporting to Katmandu, capital city of Nepal.

The University is participating with the Nepalese ministry of education in training teachers and establishing four year teachers' colleges in that country.

Participates in Study

Warren C. Price, associate professor of journalism, attended a conference of a special council of the Association for Education in Journalism, November 4-6 in Chicago. The nine-man council, of which Price is a member, is composed of university professors and deans in journalism. It examined the feasibility of conducting a broad study of the American press performance in the forthcoming presidential campaigns during 1956. The Fund for the Republic, a Ford Foundation activity, made a special grant of $5,000 to the Association for this preliminary investigation.

Writes Book

"Easy Songs for Boys," a book by Milton Dieterich, assistant professor of music, was published recently by C. C. Birchard and Company of Boston. Dieterich collaborated on the book with Carl O. Thompson of the State Teachers' College in Bemidji, Minnesota.

Dieterich recently composed the arrangement of "Kyrie Eleison," in a film now being distributed in Germany by the Voice of America. The composition is sung by the Washington and Lee High School Chorus of Arlington, Virginia in the movie.

DR. JAMES D. BARNETT, professor emeritus of political science and former department head, recently observed his 85th birthday. At Oregon nearly half a century, Dr. Barnett is known widely as a leading authority on constitutional law. He retired from the University after World War II, but continued to live on the campus at the Faculty Club until last spring, when he moved into a private home in Eugene.

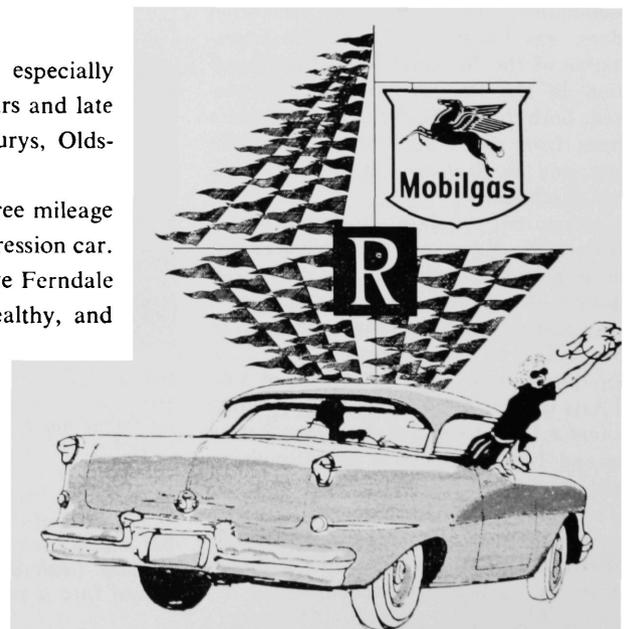

Oldsmobile is a real rocket with Mobilgas Special

Dramatically improved premium—Mobilgas Special—was especially developed for the top performance requirements of all 1955 cars and late model Buicks, Cadillacs, Chryslers, DeSotos, Lincolns, Mercurys, Oldsmobiles, Packards, and Pontiacs.

Mobilgas Special brings you the ultimate in smooth, knock-free mileage and guarantees the performance built into your ultra-high compression car. Its anti-knock rating has been boosted to the highest by exclusive Ferndale refining. Mobil Power Compound keeps the engine clean, healthy, and responsive.

(If you own a pre-1955 Ford, Chevrolet, Plymouth, Dodge, Studebaker, Nash or Hudson, new grade Mobilgas gives smooth, knock-free mileage in 8 out of 10 of these cars, yet sells at the price of regular.)

LA Alumni Meet Before USC Game

More than 100 Oregon alumni living in metropolitan Los Angeles attended the Oregon-USC pre-game dinner in the USC Student Union, September 23. Tom Hazard, '46, and Jack Michel, '43, co-chaired the event. We predict:

1955's most infuriating magazine article will be

"THE NATURAL SUPERIORITY OF IVY LEAGUE MEN"

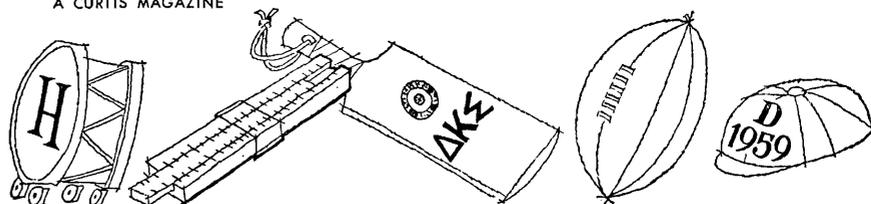

in November HOLIDAY magazine

... and that its noted author, Henry Morton Robinson (Columbia '29) will be man most burned in effigy on non-Ivy campuses this fall! It's guaranteed to enrage the letter men of "Moline Subnormal" and "Turpentine Tech" ... reddened the faces of state universities' "professorlings" (that's what Robinson calls 'em) ... wounded the tender feelings of every drum majorette in America.

You'll smoulder at Robinson's gibes at courses in chain-store management and embalming! Burn at his references to state universities as "educational rabbit warrens." Explode at his views on mass education for the "denizens of Outer Mediocrity." It's one of a trio of provocative articles on the Ivy League—its men, its social life, its sports. Don't miss it!

November HOLIDAY—on your newsstand October 18th!

How I got into sales management after two years selling

(Some questions answered by a New England Mutual Life General Agent)

"I WANT TO CREATE MY OWN FUTURE." With those words George G. Joseph left his old job and joined the New England Mutual Life Insurance Company in 1947. Today, 8 years later, Mr. Joseph is a General Agent, partner in the Bowes & Joseph Agency, Newark, New Jersey. (The two partners are shown here.) Not an unusual story, as you will see below. This proves that with New England Life a man can go as far as industry and ability will take him.

Had you any experience in life insurance before you joined the New England Life?

"None whatsoever. I joined the New England in 1947, after a short stretch as a sales representative for a large company. I wanted to prove how much I was worth by my own initiative. Two years later I was promoted to sales management, and in 1952 I became a General Agent."

What was the chief factor in your success?

"The attitude of my General Agent. His policy was to help young men progress, delegate responsibility, and give everyone a chance to prove his management capabilities. And my success is no exception. In my own agency alone, there are eight other men who got into management after less than three years of selling."

How about earnings?

"Those eight men I mentioned, and I, earned an average of more than $11,000 our first year in Sales Management. Our present average yearly income is well over $18,000, and most of us are only in our middle thirties. You can see there are 'no strings attached' to a man in life insurance. A career with the New England Life is bound to mean a better life for you."

How can I tell what my chances are for success in life insurance?

"The Company has a proved selection process for determining your aptitude, and will tell you frankly what the results indicate. Write Vice President L. M. Huppeler, 501 Boylston Street, Boston, Mass., for further information. No obligation will be implied either way."

A BETTER LIFE FOR YOU

Who's to pay the cost of education?

"WHATEVER the plan, there must be more support per person and per corporation. We'll all just have to dig a little deeper. In recent years, our bill for organized education in all categories has been running at less than 4% of the Gross National Product. With predicted growth in our national output, if we can increase only a little the percentage spent on education, our needs will be met.

"Under the Corporate Alumnus Program, the General Electric Educational and Charitable Fund matches up to $1,000 donated by employees to their alma maters. This concept is based upon the belief that the individual decisions of thousands will form a sound basis for widespread support of education . . . The responsibility of the alumni group is, I believe, to sell the idea that in a free economy in the long run it is desirable that the real cost of education be borne by the individual who gets the education and benefits from it."*

— PHILIP D. REED,
Chairman of the Board of Directors, General Electric Company

How far can our aid to education go?

"THIS approach (Corporate Alumnus Program) is only a start. But it is rooted in the recognition that you and I can't longer continue to run a progressive and productive school system on a charity basis. I will answer the question as to who should pay for a college education by offering the cold-nosed conclusion that in a free economy in the long run it both should be, and rightfully can be, the man who gets the education; and that should be made clear to him the day he starts to get it.

"Of course, we also favor business support, for business draws many of its ablest profit-making human resources from your institutions. We must examine such support, however, instance by instance, and never let it slide into any license to dictate policy or to restrict academic activities ably conceived by courageous and level-headed educators who are truly alert to both the challenges and the opportunities of the economy and the society in which they live."*

— HAROLD F. SMIDDY,
Vice President, Management Consultation Services, General Electric

What obligation does an alumnus have?

"Is it such a revolutionary idea that the real cost of education be borne by the individual who gets that education and benefits from it? Not necessarily across the barrel head, not necessarily all at once, and not necessarily even under certain sets of circumstances. But I submit that it is an unhealthy idea for an individual to expect society to pay his education bill, any more than to expect society to pay for his food, clothing, shelter, hospitalization, vacations, and ultimately for the education of his children and grandchildren, too.

"One of the first things that business babes in the education woods learned was that practically nobody pays the real cost of his education. One reason is that he is never asked to pay it. We have acknowledged that the organization of which an individual is a part shares the benefits, and we are willing to help pay the bill — but this is a joint undertaking."*

Manager, Educational Relations, General Electric

Working for you everywhere —

Little black blocks ... called brushes

You wouldn't touch an object spinning around at thousands of revolutions per minute. But just such a contact is necessary to transfer electricity between the moving and the stationary parts of electric motors that serve us all.

HOW DOES ELECTRICITY bridge the gap? Through little blocks of carbon or graphite called brushes.

Nearly 500 brushes, each the size of a pack of cards, are in a diesel-electric locomotive, while a tiny pair of brushes, hardly the size of a pencil eraser, do the job in your vacuum cleaner.

WHY BRUSHES OF CARBON or graphite? Because they are excellent conductors of electricity and are dependable and long-lasting, despite constant pressure against moving parts.

NEARLY 60 YEARS AGO, the people of Union Carbide began making carbon brushes. Today, UCC makes millions of brushes each year, in thousands of different sizes and types. Wherever electricity is generated and used — on, above, or beneath the earth and water — these brushes are at work, your dependable, seldom-seen servants.

Georgia Prather Crews '14 died April 27. From the University she received a B.A. degree in history. In 1929 she married A. C. Crews. For many years Mr. and Mrs. Crews operated a feed and seed store and a florist shop in Toledo, Ore. Prior to her death, Mr. and Mrs. Crews lived in Ashland, Ore.

Ella Ellice Shearer Robinson '14 died April 7. She married Earl G. Robinson '13, who survives her. Also surviving her are four children: Barbara Becker, George F. Robinson '40, Kenneth, and James. Mrs. Robinson had made her home at 212 S. 9th, Yakima, Wash., for many years.

Samuel W. Poole '15 died in Portland June 13. Mr. Poole was admitted to practice law in 1915 after his graduation from the University. He was a veteran of the Spanish-American war. Mr. Poole was an active member of the Oregon bar until 1950. Mrs. Mildred Poole, his wife, survives him.

Walter H. Grebe '18 died May 8 in Portland. For the last 20 years he had operated an automobile warehouse. While on campus he was a member of Phi Gamma Delta fraternity. Mr. Grebe was also a member of Mt. Tabor Masonic lodge, Al Kader temple, Rotary club, Waverly country club, and Portland Athletic club. He is survived by Mrs. Grebe and a son, Walter H. Jr.

Dr. Thomas O. Monteith '18 passed away June 3. He was a 1922 graduate of Kirksville college of osteopathy in Missouri. Dr. Monteith practiced in Springfield, Mass., and with the Army medical corps during World War I. He was a member of the American Legion, Samuel Sherwood Lodge, Scottish Rite Bodies, and the Melha Temple Shriners. Dr. Monteith is survived by his wife, Agnes Potter, who lives in Long Meadows, Mass.

Floyd H. Hart '20, prominent Oregon lumberman, died May 25. Mr. Hart was president and general manager of Timber Products company in Medford, Oregon. He was a pioneer aviator and a decorated veteran of two world wars. Last year Mr. Hart headed a committee appointed by Secretary of Interior McKay to review BLM operations and make recommendations. He attended Harvard school at Los Angeles and Illinois between 1916 and 1920. He is survived by his widow, Leah; two daughters, Mrs. Jack Bergstrom, and Mrs. Charity Hart Keeble '43; and a son, Floyd Jr.

Elmo W. Madden '21 died in the early part of this year. He had served as a lieutenant commander in the naval reserve, an importer, and as a manager-accountant for a logging operation. In 1921, Mr. Madden married Aurita Payson '23, who died five years ago. The couple were former Portland residents.

Vida Davis Melville '29 died July 17. She had been a resident of Gold Beach, Ore., several years. Mrs. Melville received a B.A. in Education from the University, and has attended Ashland Normal school. She was a member of Phi Beta Kappa. In 1932 she married John Melville and they had four daughters; Lynne Johnson, Joan Melville, Carole Melville, and Diane Black. She is survived by Mr. Melville and daughters.

Jan. 22, Christen Quevli '26 died. He received an M.D. from the University in 1926. In 1928, Dr. Quevli married Christine Thomas and they had one child, Hittubelle. His address was 1325 Medical Arts Building, Tacoma, Wn.

and personal development. One of the irrelevancies in the American university is the widespread confusion of social and personal development, under proper circumstances may progress toward an education through competition, perhaps even more through the dullness of practice. But the spectator is merely entertained, unless he becomes so personally involved that he experiences an emotional catharsis. Even in this event, the chances that he will understand what is happening to him are remote.

The educated and the wise person must be in a state of spiritual growth and must sooner or later achieve spiritual understanding, which is in a way akin to the understanding of emotional things. Some people progress toward this understanding through compliance and regular spiritual exercises; others progress in this direction through inquiring agnosticism. It is often difficult to tell from inspection of a man of 45 by which road he reached his present spiritual state. Since we must assume that most of our students will survive college, we must leave both roads open to them in college. A man who does not understand the nature of a religious experience cannot be called educated or wise.

These difficulties in education affect its ultimate and specialized product, the Ph.D. Some are scholars, some researchers. Ultimately, the difference between the scholar and the researcher is the difference between the educated and the trained, between the wise and the learned. The scholar understands his material; the research accumulates it. The scholar presents it so that horizons of understanding are expanded; the researcher presents it so that the foreground becomes fuller and perhaps more crowded, even cluttered. The researcher is useful to the scholar, but he does not himself create; it is the scholar who does this.

I am sometimes alarmed by the phrase, "a well-filled mind." Many a well-filled mind is merely stuffed and, unless the contents of the mind have shape and pattern, they are not very useful.

The essential feature of the university, then, is its capacity to lead young men and women toward education, toward wisdom through contact and study with scholars, to lead them toward control through understanding of their persons—physical, social, and emotional. I do not mean by any of this that training is undesirable. I mean simply that the trained man who has not been educated before or during his training, and especially after it, is not complete and is perhaps maimed by his very training.

The essential feature, then, of the university is also its central problem—how to become or how to remain an educational institution. But there are other problems, too.

One of these is the problem of the teacher. Here, I think, the graduate schools have failed but are now recovering, for they too long proceeded on the assumption that they were training persons who were already educated. This assumption may be true to the extent that many bachelors have made great strides toward education before they enter graduate school. But it is inherently false in itself, because education must be regarded as a continuous process. Much of what goes on in the American graduate school of arts and sciences is designed to produce the well-stuffed mind, to aim for training rather than for further education. When the young doctors from our graduate schools commence to teach, they perpetuate the tradition of stuffing younger minds even fuller than their own were stuffed. For a time they forget that the purpose of the undergraduate college is not to train but to educate. Sooner or later the good ones recover from their error, but the mediocre ones may never do so. The good one are likely to acquire such a revulsion for what they have been doing that they cease to be productive, having inextricably confused scholarship with research. A few, however, manage to proceed from research to scholarship and even fewer acquire an understanding of scholarship in the graduate school itself.

Recently I think there has developed a better understanding of the purpose of the graduate school of arts and sciences. Some of them have once again become educational institutions, aiming at the development of scholars rather than the production of pick-and-shovel men. But some have gone too far and have produced a bogus scholarship which does not rest firmly on demonstrable fact; their devotees turn out fanciful nonsense or flabby excrescences.

A problem with the teacher is his recruitment. We have taken to bribing young men and women to enter graduate school, and we have mumbled about the attractive life of the professor, and found a few fringe benefits. All this is idle talk; unless we make the financial remuneration of a professor equal to that of practitioners of the other learned professions, we will soon have a great lump of second-rate professors, leavened only by the few first-rate men who are dedicated idealists.

Another problem of the university, closely allied to the problem of training and education, is the problem of vocationalism. Our society is constructed on the principle that everyone ought to have something to do, a thoroughly sound principle provided that one does not work too hard at it. A corollary follows that, when a student enters college as an undergraduate, he ought to know what he wants to do; if he wants to be a businessman, he ought to enter a school of commerce; if he wants to be an architect, he ought to enter a school of architecture.

Some institutions have met the situation by repudiating undergraduate professional schools. Some have accepted the situation and have frankly set up vocational schools at the undergraduate level. Others have sought to compromise with the situation by forming the curricula of their professional schools in such a way that the student acquires education whether he wants it or not and, in so doing, acquires an understanding of his training. This is really education for a vocation, not vocational training. I hope it will prevail. If an institution can really devise a curriculum and enable a faculty to force a candidate for an Sc.B. in business administration toward an education and away from training, that institution is quite as virtuous as the one that awards an Sc.B. in Chemistry to chemists who are educated rather than trained, and more so than the school that merely trains chemists.

A very complex case is that of engineering. Engineers and, indeed, other scientists used to be trained, not educated. Now it is perfectly possible to take a class of boys entering an engineering school in the fall of 1955 and to set a curriculum for them so that they will graduate in 1959 with the basic knowledge and skills necessary for an engineer in 1959—that is, if the faculty who teach boys are flexible enough and alert enough so that they change the curriculum in the middle as the practice of engineering alters, for engineering is a very rapidly developing profession. It now appears to many that engineering training is of only temporary value, that what the engineering schools must do is to educate men who are, in effect, applied scientists; as situations and practice change, such men can draw upon their accumulated fundamental knowledge, their understanding, and indeed their wisdom, first, to learn the art of engineering in practice (for it cannot be taught in school), and then to apply principles, new and old, to new situations. We are in the process of discovering that the same thing is true of business training and that in the future the best prospect for an important job with a large corporation is not the trained man but the educated man.

Another fundamental problem of the university is the application or misapplication of democracy, which has come very close to wrecking our schools and may very well wreck our colleges. Our founding fathers intended that young men (I do not believe they thought much about young women) should have equal opportunities within their capacities. They did not intend that everyone should be treated exactly alike. Yet public pressure has forced most public schools to treat everyone exactly alike, so that the dolt and the brilliant are required to proceed at the same pace, with the result that the dolt is bemused and the brilliant bored.

Thought many of us have forgotten it, the problems of the schools are the problems of the universities and, happily, bright spots now appear on the horizon in the form of various programs to encourage the exceptionally good student to progress at an exceptional pace toward an education. But there is a further danger that has not yet been dealt with, the danger that exists for those institutions which are required or expected to accept, on the democratic principle, students who are not capable of doing the work and meeting the standards of the institutions. Some have adapted themselves to this situation so well that their standards not only have been lowered but have disappeared. Others have dealt with the situation by admitting hordes of students and flunking out large numbers, to the damage of the students who are dismissed if, in being dismissed, they have gained nothing, and have offered up what confidence they had on the altar of democracy.

The next five years will provide the happiest opportunity that institutions of higher education in this country may ever have to deal with this problem. The pressure of students will be such that selective admission policies can be established, if not with ease, with safety and with a clear conscience, for there is not today a high school graduate in this country, no matter how dull or how lazy he may be, who cannot find a college bad enough for him to graduate from or, at least, to enter. Five years from now, if 500 such students appear, a new, weak college will be founded for them.

We must take great care to ensure that all our young men do indeed enjoy democracy of opportunity, but that the opportunities presented to them are those they are capable of using and from which they can profit.

Many of the questions that I have been discussing have their origins in another and very fundamental problem: that is the failure of the intellectual to communicate to society his aims, views, purposes, and uses. This failure to communicate is the cause of the anti-intellectualism which is the extreme form of the misunderstanding of our universities. Fundamentally, this failure to communicate is the result of snobbery, of an unwillingness to vulgarize or to popularize, but, even more basically, of a confusion between scholarship and research. Most research is not communicable; most scholarship is. Unless the faculties of our colleges and universities can continue to reach the students they have educated in previous generations and unless they can go beyond this, so that they make themselves comprehensible either directly or through their students to the people of this country, these problems will always be with us.

I do not think that I have said anything that has not been said before many times, nor have I tried to, for I feel that in the matters that face us we must return to the simple and old solutions rather than to the bizarre and the sensational.

This, then, is the mission and these are some problems by which the future of the university must be shaped. Will it be all things to all men, and all women, too, adapting its curriculum to the whims of its students and their parents and the public without regard to its fundamental purpose? Or will it rather take a firm stand that its central function is the increase of human understanding through the education of the young and the discovery and communication of the new by scholarship, that its success depends upon the production of a series of leaders and other competent people and on a series of contributions to human understanding by its faculties? Will the university take the straight and narrow path that leads to the hard and correct solution of its problems or will it take the pleasant, easy, broad, and aimless road that leads to the hell of complacency, mediocrity, and ultimately uselessness?
